On September 27, 1917, when the case again came up for hearing, the respondent, through counsel, moved for a continuance on the ground of her inability to be present on account of illness, and in support of her motion produced the sworn certificate of a physician, resident at Jamaica Plain, in the commonwealth of Massachusetts, stating that she was physically unable to attend the hearing. Affidavits were also produced on behalf of the petitioner tending to show that the illness of the respondent was not real, but was pretended, and designed to aid her in procuring the continuance asked for. The trial court refused to continue the case, the petitioner presented his testimony, and a decision was rendered in his favor. It is not claimed that the testimony offered was insufficient, but that the court erred in its refusal to continue the case.

On March 19, 1918, the respondent filed two motions, the one in the nature of a cross-petition for divorce, and the other to vacate the decision of the trial court in granting the petition and to assign the case for hearing upon the petition and cross-petition. These motions were denied. The case now comes to us upon the respondent's exceptions, which in substance allege the errors of the trial court in refusing a continuance on September 27, 1917, and in denying the respondent's motion to vacate its former decision in favor of the petitioner.

[1-3] These matters are within the discretion of the trial court. It is within the province of this court to grant relief in cases where an abuse of discretion is shown. An examination of the record presented to us does not disclose anything which would justify the conclusion that the trial court had abused its discretion, and therefore we think that the respondent's exceptions must be overruled.

The respondent's exceptions are overruled, and the cause is remanded to the superior court for further proceedings.

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION v. RHODE ISLAND CO.

(Nos. 297-302.)

(Supreme Court of Rhode Island. Oct. 30, 1918.)

CARRIERS §18(2)—REGULATION—INCREASE OF FARES — ORDER OF PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION—APPEAL.

Where Public Utilities Commission, in order to provide railway company with funds necessary for continued operation of its lines, made order authorizing a schedule of increased fares, such schedule will be permitted to remain in force, where appeals from order are taken until determination upon merits of the appeals.

Appeals from Public Utilities Commission.

Proceedings before the Public Utilities Commission. From an order of the Commission authorizing schedule of increased fares for passengers of Rhode Island Company, the Town of Warwick, the City of Cranston, the Town of Johnston, the Town of North Providence, the Town of East Providence, and the Town of Lincoln separately appeal. The Rhode Island Company moves that appeals shall not operate as a stay of the Commission's order. An order that appeals shall not operate as stay of Commission's order continued in force until further order.

Harold R. Curtis, Town Sol., of Providence, for town of Warwick. Frank H. Wildes, City Sol., of Cranston, for city of Cranston. James E. Dooley, Town Sol., of Johnston, for town of Johnston. Cushing, Carroll & McCartin, of Providence, for town of North Providence. A. Truman Patterson, Town Sol., of Providence, for town of East Providence. Albert B. West, of Providence, for town of Lincoln. Clifford Whipple and G. Frederick Frost, both of Providence, for Rhode Island Co.

PER CURIAM. Now, after a hearing held on October 28, 1918, before the full court, of the motion made on behalf of the Rhode Island Company that the above-entitled appeals shall not operate as a stay of the order of the Public Utilities Commission made on the 19th day of October, 1918, and after a consideration of the arguments of counsel for the several interests represented at the said hearing, the court has come to the following conclusion:

It clearly appeared at the hearing that the Rhode Island Company, before the entry of said order by the Public Utilities Commission, was in great need of increased revenue to meet its obligations and the cost of operating its transportation system; that the order appealed from was one authorizing a schedule of increased fares, which said company should be permitted to charge its passengers, and was intended to provide the funds necessary for the continued operation of the trolley lines of said company.

The main objections of the appellants stated at the hearing were that the commission in authorizing said schedule of increased fares had not placed the burden of increase fairly and that the patrons of said company residing in certain sections were subject to unfair and unjust discrimination. The force of these objections can only be determined by this court after a hearing upon the merits of the appeals. In the meantime it is essential to the welfare and safety of the various communities served by said company that there should be no interruption of that service. From what this court has been able to learn at said hearing, the court is of the opinion that the rights and interests of all parties will best be preserved by permitting the schedule of fares fixed by said commission to remain in force until there can be a determination upon the merits of said appeals.

Our determination, therefore, is that the orders heretofore entered in the above mat-as a stay of the order of the Public Utilities Commission, until further order of this court, be continued in force until further order.

(7 Boyce, 178)

DE PARIS v. WILMINGTON TRUST CO.
(Supreme Court of Delaware. Sept. 5, 1918.)

1. GUARANTY — 105 — CONTRIBUTION — ENFORCEMENT.

If a coguarantor pays the whole debt, he may compel the other to pay one-half thereof by action at law based on an implied promise.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS — 518(5) — PRIVACY BETWEEN DOMICILIARY AND ANCILLARY ADMINISTRATORS.

There is no privacy between a domiciliary and an ancillary administrator, there being but one estate, and both being in privacy with decedent and his estate but not with each other.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS — 524(1) — SUIT BY ADMINISTRATOR — FOREIGN JUDGMENTS.

A domiciliary administrator may sue in his own name in another state on a judgment recovered by him in his representative capacity in the state of the domicile, because the judgment is his property.

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS — 518(5) — DOMICILIARY AND ANCILLARY ADMINISTRATORS.

Where a contract of guaranty was executed in Venezuela by two coguarantors, and one of them died after demand for payment and the debt was paid by his succession in Venezuela, an ancillary administrator of his estate appointed in Delaware could not enforce contribution from the coguarantor; there being no privacy of estate between the two administrators.

Error to Superior Court, New Castle County.

Foreign attachment by the Wilmington Trust Company, administrator against Isabel M. R. de Paris, under which defendant's shares of stock in a Delaware corporation was seized. The defendant appeared by giving security, thereby dissolving the attachment. The case was pleaded to issue. Trial by jury. Verdict for the plaintiff. Judgment entered. Defendant brings error. Judgment reversed.

Hugh M. Morris, of Wilmington, for plaintiff in error. Ward, Gray & Neary, of Wilmington, for defendant in error.

The declaration consisted of the common counts and thereafter from time to time three amendments, each consisting of additional counts. The defendant demurred generally to the counts of one of the amendments. The demurrer was overruled (5 Boyce, 565, 96 Atl. 30), Judges RICE and HEISEL sitting below, and before whom the case subsequently came on for trial. When plaintiff at the trial rested, counsel for defendant moved for a non-suit, for the following reasons:

That the testimony and the documentary evidence in this case show that the contracts were made in Venezuela, that the contracts was paid by his Venezuelan succession; that the dictionary in evidence shows that succession intestate means heirs-at-law; that we have from the testimony of Doctor Rivas that the receipt paid by the succession means paid by the heirs-at-law, so that we have a payment made by the heirs-at-law in Venezuela or by the succession; that no devolution of title from the persons in Venezuela has been shown passing from them to this plaintiff; that the documentary evidence shows that this payment was made in September, 1912, and that letters of administration were not granted to the Wilmington Trust Company until a year or more thereafter; that the evidence shows that the payment was not made by the Wilmington Trust Company; that the testimony shows title in the Venezuelan heirs-at-law of the Venezuelan succession; that there is no privacy between administrators in Venezuela and the Wilmington Trust Company, administrator, the plaintiff in this case; citing Story on Conflict of Laws, 518; Davis v. Heralds of Liberty, 39 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 399; Johnson v. Powers, 139 U. S. 156, 11 Sup. Ct. 525, 35 L. Ed. 112; 8 A. & E. Ency. of Law (1st Ed.) 427; Eng. Com. Law Reps. vols. 1-3, p. 15; 19 A. & E. Ency. of Law (1st Ed.) 156; Stacy v. Thrasher, 6 How. 44, 58, 12 L. Ed. 337; McCord v. Thompson, 92 Ind. 565; 18 Cyc. 1229-1237, 874, 878; Giddings v. Green (C. C.) 48 Fed. 489; Hare v. O'Brien, 233 Pa. 330, 82 Atl. 475, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 430, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 624; Talmage v. Chapel, 16 Mass. 71; that there is no identity of parties, and the burden of showing privacy of parties is upon the plaintiff. The motion for a non-suit was also based on defendant's plea No. 2, being the first special plea, on the points which were disposed of on the demurrer, reported in 5 Boyce, 565, 96 Atl. 30.

The motion was refused, HEISEL, J., delivering the following opinion:

The testimony introduced by the plaintiff shows that during the year 1911, Joseph J. Paris, son of the defendant, was the maker of several instruments of writing in the nature of promissory notes and an account current wherein he obligated himself to pay to certain banks in Maracaibo, Venezuela, the several sums of money mentioned in said instruments of writing.

At the same time the plaintiff's intestate, Federico Evaristo Schemel, and the defendant, Isabel M. R. de Paris, guaranteed the payment of the sums of money mentioned in the said several instruments of writing in the following language, or language to the same effect:

"The undersigned bind themselves jointly with the grantor to the fulfillment of this obligation under the same terms and conditions above stipulated. Dated as above."

That under such guaranty and the law of Venezuela, Schemel and Mrs. De Paris, as such joint guarantors, were each liable for the total unpaid balance of each of said instruments of writing so guaranteed by them; but should either of them be obliged to pay any sum by reason of such guaranty, the other would be liable to the one so paying for one-half of the amount so paid, with interest from the time of such payment.

Said notes and account current being overdue and unpaid by the said Joseph J. Paris, the holders thereof on the sixth of July, 1912, duly and properly notified Schemel to that effect, and demanded that he pay the several amounts due under his contract of guaranty with Mrs. De Paris thereon.

Schemel died intestate on the fifteenth of the same July without having made any payment on said notes or account current, but on the fifth of September following, the estate, or representatives of the estate of Schemel paid to the holders of said notes and account current the sum of 72,426.58 bolivars in money of the United States of Venezuela.

That under the Laws of Venezuela, upon the death of a person intestate no administrator is appointed to administer the estate as is provided under our law, but the estate is represented by those heirs of the intestate who elect to take the inheritance, and administered by them collectively until all the debts of the estate are paid and the estate divided amongst them.

That all the parties heretofore mentioned resided in the United States of Venezuela and the transactions described took place in that country.

That letters of administration on said Schemel's estate was granted to the Wilmington Trust Company in this state, September 11, 1913.

Upon this evidence counsel for defendant moves for a non-suit on two grounds:

First: For reasons fully set out by defendant in her second plea, being the first special plea, to the declaration, and which is briefly, that all the parties to the notes and account current sued upon, being residents of Venezuela and the debts in question contracted in that country, they constitute no portion of Schemel's estate, rights or credits within the State of Delaware, and therefore the Wilmington Trust Company, as administrator in this State, acquired no claim, right, title or interest in said notes and account current, and had no right to maintain this action. This same question was decided by this Court at an earlier stage of this case upon demurrer and there determined contrary to defendant's contention, so without repeating here the reasons stated there, we decline to grant the motion on this first ground.

Defendant's second ground for his motion is that the representatives of Schemel's estate in Venezuela are the only parties who can properly maintain this action, for the reason that the case of action resulted from, or arose out of, something done by them, after the death of Schemel, and not because of anything done, or contract entered into, by Schemel during his lifetime;

In other words that no action could be brought by Schemel's estate anywhere against this defendant for contribution under the contract of guaranty, until some amount of money had been paid by Schemel in his lifetime or by representatives of his estate after his death.

That the evidence shows no payment by Schemel in his lifetime, but does show payments by representatives of his estate in Venezuela after his death; therefore such representatives only could maintain the action, because the cause of action accrued by reason of the payment of money by them, which conferred upon them, or fixed in them, the exclusive right to maintain the action, either in their representative capacity or personally; and there being no privity between representatives of estates in different states or countries, the right to maintain this action could not pass from them to the plaintiff, the administrator of Schemel in this state. Citing among others the following authorities: Story on Conflict of Laws, 518, 522; 8 A. & E. Ency. of Laws, 427; 19 A. & E. Ency. of Laws, 156; Stacy v. Thrasher, 6 How. 44, 58, 12 L. Ed. 337; 18 Cyc. 874, 878; McCord v. Thompson, 92 Ind. 565; Talmage v. Chapel, 16 Mass. 71.

These authorities as we view the evidence in this case do not touch the point. It is not a question of privity between administrators of an estate in different jurisdictions, or what authority if any, one administrator may acquire by reason of some act of another administrator in a foreign jurisdiction, but the question is the right of an administrator to enforce the provisions of a contract made by his intestate.

When Schemel and Mrs. Paris signed the obligations in evidence, as joint guarantors, they agreed that should the maker of those obligations not satisfy them according to their provisions, the guarantors would; and they further agreed, under the provisions of the law of Venezuela, that should either be obliged to pay all or any part of said obligations, the others or his heirs or representatives, would repay to the one so paying, one-half the amount paid, with interest from the date of such payment.

That, we think, was the cause of action as between Schemel or his estate and Mrs. Paris.

True the right of Schemel or his estate to bring an action against the defendant was not complete until Schemel or his estate had paid out some amount as a consequence of his joint guarantyship with defendant. His obligation to pay, however, was complete before his death, because the maker of the notes and account guaranteed had failed to pay,

Venezuela in discharging this obligation, did nothing more than carry out the provisions of the contract made by Schemel with the defendant. This we think could have no other effect upon the right of his administrator in this jurisdiction to maintain an action upon such contracts, than if Schemel had paid it himself.

Whereupon the following was stated upon the record:

Mr. Morris: I understand it is admitted by Mr. Gray that the Wilmington Trust Company did not make payment of these obligations and account current to the payees or obligees of those promissory notes or account current.

Mr. Gray: Yes, they did not actually make any payments.

Mr. Morris: Is it also admitted that Isabel M. R. de Paris was a resident and domiciled in Venezuela at the time of the death of Federico Evaristo Schemel, and has been there resident and domiciled at all times since?

Mr. Gray: Yes.

When both sides had rested, Mr. Gray asked the Court to charge the jury that the amount of liability of the defendant in this case, if the jury should find a verdict for the plaintiff, is, in American dollars, $8,197.69, figured at the rate of exchange of 5.10 bolivars equal to one dollar, with interest at three per cent. per annum.

Mr. Morris requested the court to instruct the jury to return a verdict for the defendant.

Because:

(a) The evidence discloses that the obligations of Joseph J. Paris for which the said Federico Evaristo Schemel and the said defendant were surety were made and payable in the Republic of the United States of Venezuela and not in the State of Delaware.

(b) All the parties to each of the said obligations including the sureties were residents of the said Republic of the United States of Venezuela.

(c) The evidence discloses that the said obligations were paid by the heirs-at-law of the said Federico Evaristo Schemel about the third, fourth and fifth days of September, 1912, and that thereupon and thereby the title to the said supposed causes or rights of action became vested exclusively in the said heirs-at-law in the United States of Venezuela and that letters of administration upon the goods and chattels, rights and credits of the said Federico Evaristo Schemel within the State of Delaware were not granted to the plaintiff herein until more than a year thereafter.

(d) The declaration and evidence disclose that the title to the alleged causes or rights of action is not in the plaintiff.

(e) The declaration and evidence disclose that the title to the alleged causes or rights of action is in the heirs-at-law of the said Federico Evaristo Schemel in the Republic of the United States of Venezuela.

in the Republic of Venezuela and the plaintiff as administrator of the goods and chattels, rights and credits of the said Federico Evaristo Schemel in the Republic of Venezuela and the plaintiff as administrator of the goods and chattels, rights and credits of the said Federico Evaristo Schemel in the State of Delaware, and particularly the supposed causes or rights of action upon in this case.

(g) The record and evidence disclose the situs of the debts sued for is not State of Delaware.

(h) The record and evidence disclose the situs of the alleged debts sued for at the time said supposed causes or rights of action arose, and at all times since have been in the Republic of the United States of Venezuela.

(i) The record and evidence disclose the said supposed debts sued for are assets of the estate of the said Federico Evaristo Schemel within the State of Delaware.

HEISEL, J., charging the Jury:

Gentlemen of the Jury: On the fifth of January, 1914, upon proper affidavit by the plaintiff, The Wilmington Trust Company, as administrator of Federico Evaristo Schemel, a writ of foreign attachment issued out of this Court against the defendant, Isabel M. R. de Paris; upon which shares of stock of a certain corporation in this state, the property of the defendant was duly attached.

The plaintiff claims and has adduced evidence in support of such claims that on the year 1911, in the United States of Venezuela, the plaintiff's intestate, that is, Federico Evaristo Schemel, and the defendant, Mrs. Paris, both of whom were residents of Venezuela, joint guarantors on certain obligations of the son of Mrs. Paris, one Joseph J. Paris, two banks in Maracaibo, Venezuela, the said Joseph J. Paris, having failed to make payments as required by these obligations, the representatives of the estate of Schemel in Venezuela were obliged to pay and did pay by reason thereof on the fourth of September, 1912, the sum of 72,426.58 bolivars of Venezuelan money, that under the law of Venezuela the defendant, Mrs. Paris, a joint guarantor was liable to contribute or pay back to the estate of Schemel half of said sum of 72,426.58 bolivars, interest thereon from the said fourth of September, 1912, at the rate of three per centum per annum to the date of your verdict.

Defendant's counsel has offered no evidence to refute these contentions made by the plaintiff, but contends that the court should instruct you to render a verdict in favor of the defendant for the various reasons set forth in their prayers, which we deem un-essary to state to you in detail. We decline to so instruct you, and we think it would be of no assistance to you in the performance of your duty in this case for us to inform you of our reasons for so doing.

We do say to you gentlemen, that it is necessary for the plaintiff to prove, first, that it is the administrator of Federico Evaristo Schemel; second, that Schemel's estate or representative of his estate in Venezuela, by reason of Schemel being a joint guarantor with the defendant upon the notes and current account in evidence, under the law in Venezuela, was or were obliged to pay, and did in fact pay, the sums of money claimed; third, that under the law of Venezuela one of two joint guarantors can recover from the other half the amount paid by one, in the satisfaction of such guaranty, with interest thereon from the date of such payment, at such rate as is provided by the law of Venezuela.

If these things are proven to your satisfaction, you should find a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and for such amount as is shown by the evidence to be one-half of the amount paid by the Schemel estate under the conditions before stated, with interest thereon from the date of such payment, at such rate of interest as is shown by the evidence to be in accordance with the laws of Venezuela.

Otherwise you should find for the defendant.

If you find for the plaintiff, the amount of your verdict should be stated in the money of the United States of America. In converting the amount of said verdict from the money of the United States of Venezuela to money of the United States of America, you should use the present rate of exchange between those two countries as shown by the evidence.

Verdict for plaintiff.

Judgment being entered, the defendant took a bill of exceptions, and sued out a writ of error, argued in the Supreme Court before CURTIS, Chancellor, PENNEWILL, Chief Justice, and BOYCE, Associate Judge.

The case is in this court on a writ of error to a judgment entered in a suit in the Superior Court for New Castle County. The action was a foreign attachment case, under which shares of stock of a Delaware corporation owned by the defendant were attached and special bail was afterwards given by the defendant, and she appeared. From the declaration it appeared that in 1911 Joseph J. de Paris made in Venezuela three promissory notes and an account current (which was also an evidence of indebtedness), and these were held by certain banks there. Federico Evaristo Schemel and the defendant below, Isabel M. R. de Paris, bound themselves in writing jointly with the maker of the notes to the fulfillment of the obligations, i. e. to the payment of the notes and account current. The obligations fell due in the lifetime of Schemel, and the principal debtor having made default in the payment thereof, demand was made upon Schemel to pay them. But no payment was made by him. On July 15, 1912, Schemel died intestate in Venezuela, leaving a widow and several children, as his heirs. It was alleged in the declaration that as such heirs the widow and children became "the legally constituted administrators and representatives of the said Federico Evaristo Schemel, deceased, in and for the jurisdiction of the Republic of the United States of Venezuela," and that under the laws of the Republic in the event of the death of a person intestate, the heirs to the extent to which they have assumed jurisdiction of the estate of the decedent stand in the place of the deceased, and succeed as such heirs to all the legal and equitable rights which the deceased may have enforced if he were alive and to all the liabilities for which the deceased would have been liable if he were alive. The notes and account current were not paid at maturity, but were paid by the heirs of Schemel in September, 1912, after his death.

By the Code of Venezuela:

"When many persons have given bond for the same debtor, for one same debt, the bondsman who has paid the debt has action against the other bondsmen for their respective parts." (See article 1811 of Venezuela Code of 1904.)

On September 12, 1913, the Wilmington Trust Company, a corporation of Delaware, was appointed administrator of Schemel, and claims that the defendant, the co-surety with Schemel, pay one-half of the money paid by the heirs of Schemel.

In addition to non assumpsit, the defendant filed two special pleas: (1) A special plea alleging that the situs of the chose in action is without the State of Delaware; that the chose in action did not constitute a part of the estate, rights or credits of the decedent within the State of Delaware, and that the plaintiff did not by virtue of its letters of administration acquire any claim, right, title or interest in or to the said chose in action. (2) That under the laws of Venezuela the payment of said obligations by the widow and children of the decedent in Venezuela was a payment by them in their individual and personal capacity and not as administrators of the decedent; that any right of contribution accruing to them under the Venezuelan laws was as a result of such payment accrued to them in their personal capacity and not as administrators and that title to the choses in action is not in the plaintiff.

At the trial, in addition to proof of the facts alleged as above, it appeared that all the parties were residents of Venezuela; and that the obligations were paid after Schemel's death by his heirs, and a demand made on behalf of the heirs on the defendant below for contribution, but that she had failed to contribute and pay her part of the debts. There was testimony to the effect that the heirs of Schemel paid the principal debt as administrator of Schemel's estate, and as heirs they were administrators. A motion for a nonsuit was refused. The defendant later moved that the jury be instructed to find a verdict for the defendant on the grounds, (1) that the debt sued for was not an asset of the estate of the decedent within the State of Delaware; and (2) that the declaration and evidence disclosed no title in the plaintiff to the causes of action. This motion was refused, the court taking the position that it was not a question of privity between administration of an estate in different jurisdictions, but as to the right of an administrator to enforce a contract made by his intestate, and as the obligation of Schemel to pay the debt was complete in his lifetime, his Delaware administrator had as much right to bring the suit here on the contract as though Schemel had in his lifetime paid the debt, his Venezuela representatives by paying the debt having done nothing more than carry out the contract made by Schemel.

There was a verdict for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, and judgment was entered thereon notwithstanding a motion in arrest of judgment based on substantially the same grounds as the prior motions. A writ of error was sued out.

There are six assignments of error. The first assignment is that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury to return a verdict for the defendant. The other assignments are that the court erred in sustaining objections made by the plaintiff to questions asked by the defendant in the examination of Julian A. Arroyo, a witness called by the defendant as an expert to testify as to the law of Venezuela. On his voir dire the witness had stated that though not counsel of record in the action, he had been acting as co-counsel with Mr. Morris, the attorney of record. The court ruled that counsel in the case should not be allowed to construe the laws of Venezuela, because the testimony was the basis for a resistance of the right of the plaintiff to recover.

CURTIS, Chancellor, after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the court:

In brief, there were two guarantors of a debt, both residents in Venezuela, and after notice of the default of the principal debtor had been received by one of the guarantors he died in Venezuela with assets there. His personal representatives there, viz.: his widow and children, who as his heirs became administrators by the laws of Venezuela without appointment, paid the whole of the debt. Later the plaintiff below was appointed administrator in Delaware, and brought suit in Delaware against the other co-guarantor for contribution by attachment of property of the defendant in Delaware.

[1] The law of contribution as between two co-guarantors is well settled. If one pays the whole of the principal debt he may compel the other to pay one-half thereof. This is also the law of Venezuela. See article 1811 of Code of 1904. It is an equitable principle based on natural justice (Eliason v. Eliason, 3 Del. Ch. 260, 263), and was originally enforceable in equity only, but is now enforceable at law, the duty of one guarantor to reimburse his co-guarantor being the basis of an implied promise to do so. This promise is considered as made when the liability is assumed. Miller v. Stout, 5 Del. Ch. 259. In the same case Chancellor Saulsbury stated the further well established and undisputed rule, recognized by the court below, that the right to sue on the promise did not arise until the co-surety had paid the whole of the principal debt, or more than his share thereof.

A court of equity will under special circumstances protect the rights of one guarantor against his co-guarantor before payment of the debt. But this is usually done to prevent the consequences of fraudulent conduct of such co-guarantor. It does not tend to show that there is a right of action at law for contribution until payment of the principal debt.

The death of one co-surety does not affect the right to demand contribution; but the right may be enforced against the estate of a co-surety by the surety who has paid the debt. Conversely, where an executor of a deceased surety pays the debt, he may enforce contribution against the co-surety. 27 Am. and Eng. Enc. of Law, 484. When an administrator of a surety pays the principal debt, he may maintain an action in his own name against the principal debtor for repayment, and the amount recovered by him will be assets in his hands. In the case of Mowry v. Adams, 14 Mass. 327, the plaintiff was administrator of B., who was surety for A., the defendant, and after the death of B. paid the debt, brought suit in his own name and not as administrator of B. against A., the principal. The court said that the right to so sue depended on whether A., the defendant, was indebted to the plaintiff, or to the estate of B., and that this depended on the time and manner of his becoming liable. And further, that as B. had no right of action until he had paid the debt of the principal, and as he, B., died without paying, there was no promise by the defendant to him.

"His (B.'s) estate was, however, liable, and the administrator, if called upon was obliged to pay. The debt of A. accrued when M. (the plaintiff) paid the money; an implied promise then arising to repay, it being, in fact the debt of A. for which M. (B.) was surety, and which was paid by M. to the use of A. But the promise could not accrue to B., he being dead. It was, therefore, a promise to the administrator. Now, it is settled that when a contract is made with an executor or administrator personally, after the death of the testator or intestate, or where money is received by the person sued after the death, in such cases the executor or administrator may sue either in his own name, or as executor or administrator. By suing in his own name, he becomes answerable to the estate for the amount recovered, and it is an implied acknowledgment of assets to the amount in his hands. The present is a case of that sort. The plaintiff takes money of the estate to pay a debt, for which the estate is answerable; he sues the principal debtor in his own name; he is chargeable with the amount of the debt as assets; and he may recover the amount * * * in his own name."

This case was cited in Cobb v. Wood, 8 Cush. (62 Mass.) 228; Williams v. Moore, 9 Pick. (26 Mass.) 432; Moore v. Petty, 135 Fed. 668, 68 C. C. A. 806.

The general principle was thus stated in Moore v. Petty, supra, though it should be noted that the suit in a foreign jurisdiction was by a domiciliary executor to recover proceeds of sale of property of the decedent received by the defendant who had made the sale as agent for the domiciliary administrator.

The fact that the principal debtor in this case had made default in paying his debt did not of itself cause a loss to either of those who had guaranteed payment of the debt, or give either a right of action against the other for contribution, for the principal debt might still be paid by the principal debtor, or be released, compromised, or abated as between the principal debtor and principal creditor. A notice to the guarantors of such default did no more damage to the guarantors, and gave no right of action for contribution. Thereafter either of the guarantors could pay the debt without waiting to be sued, and could then have recourse against the other. But until that payment be made there was no cause of action. No cause of action rose merely because of the relationship of the co-guarantors. It follows, then, that Schemel never had a cause of action against the defendant. If he had in his life no right to compel contribution, then his administrator could not acquire from him a right to sue therefor.

The court below erroneously considered that by the contract of guaranty there was a cause of action as between Schemel "or his estate," and Mrs. De Paris, the other guarantor. In other words, the court considered that there could be a cause of action without a right of action. But clearly that is impossible.

[2] If the widow and heirs of Schemel paid as heirs, then clearly the Delaware administrator had no right to sue. If they paid as administrators of Schemel, then the Delaware administrator cannot have the right to sue for contribution, unless there be privity between the Venezuela domiciliary administrators and the ancillary Delaware administrator. It is settled, however, that there is no privity between a domiciliary and an ancillary administrator. There is but one estate, and both are in privity with the decedent and his estate, but not with each other in law or in estate. Stacy v. Thrasher, 6 How. 44, 12 L. Ed. 337; Johnson v. Powers, 139 U. S. 156, 11 Sup. Ct. 525, 35 L. Ed. 112; Hare v. O'Brien, 233 Pa. 330, 336, 82 Atl. 475, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 430, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 624; Merrill v. New England, etc., Co., 103 Mass. 245, 4 Am. Rep. 548; Equitable, etc., Co. v. Vogel, 76 Ala. 441, 52 Am. St. Rep. 344. If the legal title to a demand, or the possession of evidence of it, be in the domiciliary administrator, the ancillary administrator cannot sue thereon. Merrill v. New England, etc., Co., 103 Mass. 248, 4 Am. Rep. 548; Insurance Co. v. Lewis, 97 U. S. 682, 24 L. Ed. 1114.

When a decedent has assets in more than one jurisdiction, there is unity of estate without unity of administration. But the estate of a decedent is not an entity, corporate or otherwise. Stacy v. Thrasher, 6 How. 44, 12 L. Ed. 337; Anderson v. Louisville, etc., Co., 210 Fed. 689, 127 C. C. A. 277; Davis v. Heralds of Liberty, 39 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 399; McGarvey v. Darnall, 134 Ill. 367, 25 N. E. 1005, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 861; Equitable Life, etc., Co. v. Vogel, 76 Ala. 441, 52 Am. St. Rep. 344. This is a logical deduction from the principle of the lack of privity between an ancillary and domiciliary administrator. In Stacy v. Thrasher, supra, a leading case on the subject, a judgment had been recovered against the administrator of Lee in Mississippi, the domicile of the decedent, and was assigned to Thrasher. Later letters were granted in Louisiana to Stacy on the estate of Lee, and Thrasher sought to enforce in the United States Circuit Court in Louisiana payment of the judgment debt of which he was assignee by suit against the administrator of Lee in Louisiana. The court denied him the right to recover in that way. A judgment against one administrator in one jurisdiction furnished no right of action thereon against another person appointed administrator of the same decedent in another jurisdiction, because there was no privity between them, for that denotes mutual succession or relationship to the same rights of property. The Supreme Court said:

"It is for those who assert this privity to show wherein it lies, and the argument * * * seems to be this: That the judgment against the administrator is against the estate of the intestate, and that his estate, wheresoever situated, is liable to pay his debts; therefore the plaintiff, having once established his claim against the estate by the judgment of a court, should not be called on to make proof of it again. This argument assumes that the judgment is in rem, and not in personam, or that the estate has a sort of corporate entity and unity. But this is not true, either in fact or in legal construction."

This language was quoted with approval in Johnson v. Powers, 139 U. S. 156, 11 Sup. Ct. 525, 35 L. Ed. 112, and the court said that a judgment against an administrator in one estate is res inter alios acta as an administrator of the same decedent in another state, "and cannot be even prima facie evidence of a debt."

A further illustration of the effect of the lack of privity between administrators of the same decedent appointed in different jurisdictions is the rule that an ancillary administrator cannot maintain suit on a judgment recovered in the domicile of the decedent by the domiciliary administrator for a debt due the decedent. This was so decided in Davis v. Herald of Liberty, 39 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 399, citing Talmage v. Chapel, 16 Mass. 71; 1 Freeman on Judgments, 163. The Philadelphia court based its view on the lack of privity and upon the fact that the domiciliary administrator could have sued in Pennsylvania on the judgment obtained by him as administrator in the domiciliary jurisdiction, and therefore that the ancillary administrator could not also sue, saying:

"If the foreign administrator has the right to sue here, how can the local administrator have the same right? The defendant cannot be required to answer the demands of two administrators accountable as they are to different jurisdictions."

There was, therefore, no cause of action for contribution vested in the estate of Schemel as an entity represented by two independent agents with no privity between them; but there was a right of action given to whichever agent paid the decedent's debt. If the ancillary administrator was not in privity with the domiciliary administrator, the former could not enforce a right of action which the latter had acquired because of something done by him. This conclusion is inevitable from the premises.

[3] Counsel for the defendant in error urged that injustice would be done to the estate of Schemel if the defendant in error be denied a right to maintain its present action in the court below. But there is, or was, clearly a way to enforce contribution from the plaintiff in error. The heirs of Schemel have had an action in Delaware for contribution for moneys paid by them as such. It is probably true that as administrator of Schemel they would also have had such right of action, though it is not in this case necessary to decide a point not argued. Certain it is that a judgment against the defaulting co-guarantor recovered in Venezuela, or elsewhere, by the widow and heirs of Schemel as individuals, or by them as administrators according to the law of Venezuela, would be enforceable here by attachment of property of the plaintiff in error. A domiciliary administrator may sue in his own name in another State on a judgment recovered by him in his representative capacity in the state of the domicile, because the judgment is his property. Hare v. O'Brien, 233 Pa. 330, 334, 82 Atl. 475, 39

L. R. A. (N. S.) 430, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 624, citing 1 Freeman on Judgments (4th Ed.) 217; 2 Wharton, Conflict of Laws (3d Ed.) 615½; 18 Cyc. 1239, and cases cited there; Alley v. Caspari, 80 Me. 234, 14 Atl. 12, 6 Am. St. Rep. 178; Fisher v. Fielding, 67 Conn. 91, 34 Atl. 714, 32 L. R. A. 236, 52 Am. St. Rep. 270; Mowry v. Chase, 100 Mass. 79.

[4] The court, therefore, are all of the opinion that the plaintiff had no right of action, because the right to enforce contribution was not due to Schemel in his life, and the payment of the principal debt having been made by the widow and children of Schemel, they could enforce payment either in their own names, or as administrators of Schemel; and further, that this excluded a right of action to the plaintiff, who was not in privity with them and obtained no right of action from or through them.

In view of the foregoing conclusion, it is not necessary in this case to decide whether the court below erred in excluding the testimony of Arroyo, who as counsel for the defendant, though not so of record, was not allowed to testify as to the law of Venezuela.

The court below having erred in refusing to instruct the jury to return a verdict for the defendant below, being the first assignment of error, when as hereinabove indicated it should have done so because the plaintiff below had no right to the action, the judgment of the court below should be reversed, and a mandate awarded to the court below to enter in the cause a judgment for the defendant below, with costs in this court and the court below upon the plaintiff below.

(117 Me. 371)

FEINGOLD et al. v. SUPOVITZ et al.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Oct. 10, 1918.)

1. PARTNERSHIP ⇐141—SALES OF PARTNERSHIP GOODS—AUTHORITY.

A partner has the right to sell samples belonging to the firm.

2. PARTNERSHIP ⇐156—ESTOPPEL TO DENY AGENCY.

If a partner led defendant to believe that an agent with limited powers was also a partner, defendant could rely on the agent's authority to sell samples belonging to the firm.

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⇐123(3)—POWERS OF AGENT—EVIDENCE.

In principal's action for price of samples sold by agent without authority, the price paid having been converted by the agent, evidence on issue of apparent authority held to sustain verdict for defendant.

4. TRIAL ⇐252(13)—INSTRUCTIONS—CONFORMITY WITH EVIDENCE.

In principal's action for price of samples sold by agent without authority, where the agent testified that he had previously sold other samples to defendants, instruction that, as there was no evidence of sale to defendants, mere sale of samples to others without defendants' knowledge was not a representation of authority, binding on plaintiffs, was properly refused, as passing on disputed facts.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR 1026 — HARMLESS ERROR.

Harmless error affords no ground for sustaining exceptions.

On Motion and Exceptions from Superior Court, Androscoggin County.

Action by Saul H. Feingold and others against Harry Supovitz and others. Verdict for defendants. Heard on plaintiff's motion and exceptions. Overruled.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Frank T. Powers, of Lewiston, for plaintiffs. Harry Manser, of Auburn, for defendants.

CORNISH, C. J. The plaintiffs are manufacturers of women's garments in Worcester, Mass. The defendants are retail dry goods merchants in Lewiston, Me. One Edinburg was in the employ of the plaintiffs as a traveling salesman or commercial traveler from 1912 to August 8, 1917, empowered to solicit orders from the retail trade, and was furnished by them with samples of the various garments to be exhibited to the customers in soliciting that trade. Payment for goods so purchased was made directly to the plaintiffs on bills duly presented. The title to these samples was in the principals, and not in the agent. Edinburg in the course of his business was well acquainted with the defendants, and had taken their orders for goods at various times during his five years on the road.

On August 6, 1917, after he had practically finished his last trip for the sale of goods of that particular season, and was on his way back to Worcester, he called at the defendants' store and asked them if they desired to purchase any of his discarded samples. The defendants thereupon went to the hotel where the samples were, examined them, selected certain articles, of the list value of $196.75, and gave Edinburg a check therefor, payable to his order, at the agreed price of one-third discount, and took the articles to their store. On August 19, 1917, Edinburg absconded, having disposed of all his samples, of the value of about $500, and converted the proceeds to his own use. He was subsequently apprehended in Chicago, and returned to Massachusetts. On September 11, 1917, this action of trover was brought against the defendants to recover the value of the samples so purchased; the plaintiffs claiming that Edinburg had neither real nor apparent authority to sell the same.

The verdict was in favor of the defendants, and the case is before this court on plaintiffs' motion and exception.

Motion.

Two questions of fact were submitted to the jury under proper instructions: First, whether the agent had actual authority from his principals to sell the samples under the existing circumstances; and, second, whether he had apparent authority, which the principals knowingly permitted him to assume, or held him out to the public to possess.

As to actual authority the evidence is conflicting. On this point the defendants, of course, could offer no direct evidence. The plaintiffs deny such authorization, but Edinburg, introduced by them as their witness, testified that his instructions were to return the samples to his employers, and that he had done so except in a few instances, where he had sold samples at the end of the season, which sales he had reported to the firm, and they had approved, and had themselves collected therefor.

But as this court has said:

"Whether or not a principal is bound by the acts of his agent, when dealing with a third person who does not know the extent of his authority, depends, not so much upon the actual authority given or intended to be given by the principal, as upon the question: What did such third person, dealing with the agent, believe and have a right to believe as to the agent's authority, from the acts of the principal?" Heath v. Stoddard, 91 Me. 499, 504, 40 Atl. 547, 549.

That the defendants believed in the authority of the agent can hardly be controverted. They acted in good faith, paying for the samples what appears to be the usual price under the circumstances; the garments, through the season's use in display, and in packing and repacking, having become more or less worn and wrinkled, and needing pressing and repair. As further proof of their good faith it is admitted that in early September they sent to the firm duplicate orders from the purchased samples, on three different occasions, and it was from this information that the plaintiffs discovered to whom Edinburg had made the sale. They certainly would not have taken this course, had they been conscious of a dishonest transaction.

That they had a right to believe in Edinburg's authority the jury were justified in finding from the evidence. This was a matter of inference from all the facts and circumstances. The transaction itself was not a novel one. It may well be that in the ordinary course of commercial business the soliciting of orders from samples would not be held as a matter of law to carry with it the implied authority to sell the samples themselves and collect therefor. Kohn v. Washer, 64 Tex. 131, 53 Am. Rep. 745; Hibbard v. Stein, 45 Or. 507, 78 Pac. 665. But the facts here show a different situation. The transaction was a natural one. It was the end of that particular season. The samples had, in a sense, outlived their usefulness, they were not in fresh and first-class condition. It was not an unusual testimony that he had sold them before on several occasions, although the pay therefor had been made directly to the house, and one of the plaintiffs admits that he himself, on one occasion when on the road, and under like circumstances, sold a few samples at discount to these very defendants. It was obviously a businesslike proposition.

[1-3] But the most convincing proof in favor of the defendants' contention arises from the fact that between Edinburg and the plaintiffs there was not merely a business but a family connection, a fact which was well known to the defendants and which had been talked over between the plaintiffs and them. As early as 1914 Edinburg was attentive to the daughter of one of the plaintiffs, and on July 3, 1915, was married to her. He thereby became son-in-law of Saul H. Feingold and brother-in-law of other members of the plaintiff firm. The defendants testify that at one time one of the brothers-in-law, while on a business trip and in their store at Lewiston, told the defendants of the marriage and that Edinburg was then a member of the firm. This brother-in-law admits the conversation, so far as reporting the marriage is concerned, but denies that he said that Edinburg was a partner. If Edinburg was a partner, he had a right as a part owner to sell the samples. If one of the plaintiffs led the defendants to believe that Edinburg was a partner, even though in fact he was not, then the defendants had the right to believe in Edinburg's authority to make such a sale.

This question of disputed fact was within the province of the jury, and their finding under the testimony before us should not be disturbed. The motion must be overruled.

Exceptions.

[4] The plaintiffs requested the following instruction which was refused:

"That, as there is no evidence that the agent sold samples to the defendants, the fact that he might have sold a few samples before to other customers, Supovitz Bros. not knowing of the sales, this could not be a holding out of authority to them that would bind the plaintiffs."

This request was properly refused. It called upon the court to pass upon disputed facts as a basis for legal instruction; Edinburg himself having testified that he had occasionally sold samples to these defendants before the transaction of August 6, 1917.

[5] Moreover, in the light of all the evidence and of the full and comprehensive instructions in the charge, we do not think that the plaintiffs were harmed by the refusal. Harmless error affords no ground for sustaining exceptions.

Motion and exceptions overruled.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine, Oct. 10, 1918.)

1. BRIDGES — 20(2) — PRELIMINARY PLANS — PREPARATION BY CONTRACTOR — RIGHT TO COMPENSATION.

Town was not liable to bridge contractor for work in preparing preliminary plans to use at town meeting to convince voters as to wisdom and practicability of work, which they authorized; contractor submitting bid and securing contract.

2. BRIDGES — 20(3) — CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGE — CONTRACTS — AUTHORITY OF COMMITTEE.

Where members of committee appointed by town meeting to supervise construction of bridge were dismissed by vote of town, their authority ceased, and all acts on their part, as employing contractor for bridge to make further plans to meet requirements of War Department, were void.

3. BRIDGES — 20(6) — COST OF PLANS — RIGHT OF CONTRACTOR — EVIDENCE.

In action by bridge contractor against town for cost of plans, evidence, including prior conduct of plaintiff in suing town three times without including any charge for plans, held to show his claim was in nature of an afterthought, and lacked merit.

Report from Supreme Judicial Court, York County, at Law.

Action of assumpsit by Edward B. Blaisdell against the Inhabitants of York. On report from the Supreme Judicial Court. Judgment for defendants.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Cleaves, Waterhouse & Emery, of Biddeford, and John C. Stewart, of York Village, for plaintiff. James O. Bradbury, of Saco, and E. P. Spinney, of North Berwick, for defendant.

CORNISH, C. J. This is an action of assumpsit, brought upon the following account annexed:

"York Village, Maine, Jan. 11, 1907.
"Town of York, to E. B. Blaisdell, Architect, Dr.
"To plan and specifications for new bridge and way across York river
.....$1,394.71."

The case is before the law court on report. It is an echo of the somewhat famous York bridge litigation, which has been before this court at various times and in various forms. Bliss v. Junkins, 106 Me. 128, 75 Atl. 386; Same v. Same, 107 Me. 425, 78 Atl. 478; Blaisdell v. York, 110 Me. 500, 87 Atl. 361; York v. Stewart, 110 Me. 523, 87 Atl. 372; Bliss v. Blaisdell, 110 Me. 527, 87 Atl. 374; Blaisdell v. York, 115 Me. 351, 99 Atl. 33.

A detailed history of the facts connected with the litigation may be found in Blaisdell v. York, 110 Me. 500, 87 Atl. 361. It is sufficient for the purposes of the present case to state that a special town meeting of the inhabitants of York was held on October 13, 1906, "to see if the town will vote to build the bridge and approaches as laid out by the county commissioners across York river at York Harbor." The proposition was carried by a vote of 174 in favor to 123 opposed. At the same meeting—

"on motion of Mr. Gifford, a committee of four was chosen to act in conjunction with the selectmen in building the bridge; said committee, as suggested by Mr. Gifford, to consist of Charles H. Young, Joseph W. Simpson, Charles E. Weare, and T. Perley Putnam—said committee to serve without pay."

Trouble arose between the three selectmen on the one side and the committee of four on the other as to their respective powers and duties, and on October 22, 1906, the selectmen informed the other members that they would no longer act with them, and withdrew from all further participation in the matter. The committee of four, however, continued to serve. On December 5, 1906, a written contract in the sum of $39,500 for the building of the bridge was entered into between the plaintiff and the town of York, signed in behalf of the town by the four members of the committee only. The selectmen sent various communications to the committee and to the contractor, protesting against the carrying out of the contract, denying its validity and all liability on the part of the town in connection therewith.

At the annual town meeting held on March 11, 1907, one article in the warrant read:

"To see what action the town will take relative to the committee of four appointed at a town meeting held October 13, 1906, in connection with the proposed construction of said bridge."

Upon this it was voted "that the committee be dismissed from further service." Neither the four members nor the contractor paid any attention to the protests of the selectmen, nor to this vote of dismissal. On October 17, 1907, a supplemental contract was entered into between the plaintiff and the committee, making a net increase of $6,990.43 in the cost of the bridge, due to certain changes required by the War Department. The work progressed and the bridge was completed in May, 1908, but was not accepted by the town.

The plaintiff subsequently brought suit against the town for the balance alleged to be due him under the contract of December 5, 1906, and the supplemental contract of October 17, 1907, together with certain payments made by him to A. W. Gowen, the engineer in charge. This court held the town liable under the original contract, but not under the supplemental contract, nor for the payments voluntarily made by the plaintiff to the engineer. That decision was announced July 1, 1913. Blaisdell v. York, 110 Me. 500, 87 Atl. 361.

The plaintiff then brought another action of assumpsit to recover the amount claimed under the second contract, and judgment was ordered for the defendants November 2, 1916, on the ground that the claim was res adjudicata. Blaisdell v. York, 115 Me. 351, 99 Atl. 33.

The present suit was begun on November 13, 1912, and embraces a charge not contained in either of the other suits, namely, for plans and specifications, which the plaintiff claims were prepared and furnished by him as an "architect" to the committee, some of the plans and specifications at their request, shortly after their appointment, for use by them in securing proposals and bids for the construction of the work, and the remaining plans and specifications prepared by him for the committee later on, to conform to the changes as required by the War Department. This divides the claim into two branches, the plans and specifications at the inception of the work, and those prepared to meet the changes by the War Department. We will consider these branches separately.

It is obvious, as a matter of law, that under the appointing vote of October 13, 1906, the bridge committee were both authorized and instructed to build the bridge. As was said in the opinion in the former suit:

"They were to take the necessary steps to carry out the vote of the town and obey instructions by building the way and the bridge. It was their duty to select an engineer, obtain plans and specifications, advertise for bids, make the award, and execute a contract." Blaisdell v. York, 110 Me. 500, 513, 87 Atl. 361, 370.

And this is what the committee proceeded to do; but Mr. Blaisdell was not the man selected as engineer, nor to make the plans and specifications. His name is not mentioned in that connection. The records of the meeting of the committee held on October 25, 1906, which was the first meeting held after the controversy with the selectmen had resulted in their withdrawal, and only three days after that event, contain the following vote:

"The committee voted to engage Mr. R. W. Libby, of Saco, Maine, to take levels, prepare specifications, and make changes in the plans according to the ideas of the committee."

What is meant by the term "plans" is explained by the action taken at the next meeting, held on October 30, 1906, viz.:

"It was reported by the secretary of the committee that Mr. R. W. Libby declined to act as engineer for the committee."

"Voted, to engage A. W. Gowen to take levels, change plans, and take charge of the construction of the bridge."

"Voted, to adopt the plans, with some changes, that were offered for inspection at the special town meeting of October 13, 1906."

[1] This leaves no room for doubt or discussion as to the plans which the engineer, Mr. Gowen, was to modify. They were the plans offered for inspection at the special town meeting called for the purpose of ascertaining whether the town would or would not build the bridge. Those plans had been made by Mr. Blaisdell in anticipation of that meeting, and were exhibited by him there as sketches of his idea of how the bridge and approaches should be constructed. His purpose is evident. He wished to obtain the com-tract for the construction, and the first step was to convince a majority of the voters as to the wisdom and practicability of the work. This is often done, but it is hardly to be expected that the town is to pay therefor. The plan or sketch which is before the court bears out this conclusion. It was Mr. Blaisdell's plan, not the town's. It was prepared at his own instance, for his own use at the town meeting, not at the instigation of the town, nor its committee, for the committee had not been appointed when the plan was made. It served its purpose, a favorable vote was secured, and the committee under that vote selected their own engineer, who was instructed to take levels and change plans and take charge of construction, and he continued in service until the work was completed.

On November 5, 1906, the committee voted to prepare proposals and advertise for bids. The plaintiff was one of the bidders, and to him the contract was awarded for $39,500 on November 30, 1906. It would be strange indeed if the same person should be both the engineer or "architect" to act for the committee and the bidder to secure the contract.

It is evident that no such incongruity existed here. The plaintiff is not entitled to compensation for the preliminary plans.

[2] As to any plans made by the plaintiff to meet the requirements of the War Department, calling for certain changes in the work, another point in defense arises, in addition to what has been said above. The four members of the committee were dismissed by vote of the town on March 11, 1907. Their authority then ceased, and all acts on their part after that date were unauthorized and void. Blaisdell v. York, 110 Me. 500, 520, 87 Atl. 361. The changes were directed by the War Department after that date, and the committee had then no power to employ the plaintiff to make plans and specifications at the expense of the town, even if they had desired to do so. But it is difficult to conceive why they should have employed him for that purpose. The committee already had selected its own engineer, Mr. Gowen, who was still in service, and the interests of the plaintiff as the contractor were really adverse to those of the committee, in case of any controversy. The true situation is revealed by the vote of the committee passed October 17, 1907, viz.:

"The changes ordered by the War Department were further discussed, and the extra work and cost thereby entailed, as given by the engineer and the contractor, were considered. In view of the reduction made in the figures heretofore given, it was voted to proceed under the fifth and sixth articles of the contract of December 5, 1906, to instruct the engineer, A. W. Gowen, to require the contractor to make the changes made necessary by order of the War Department; said changes and the agreed price therefor being as hereinafter set forth in an order executed of which the following is a copy."

Evidently Mr. Gowen was the engineer who was preparing all necessary plans and specifications, and who was representing the committee in dealing with Mr. Blaisdell the contractor. Mr. Blaisdell was not acting in the double and absurd capacity of contractor and "architect."

[3] It should be further observed that prior to the institution of the suit at bar the plaintiff has at different times brought three suits against the town of York to recover for services rendered, and in none of them has he included any charge for plans and specifications. The first suit was brought to recover the amount due under his contract, and in that case he took a voluntary nonsuit. A second writ was brought for the same cause, and included certain sums alleged to have been paid by the contractor to the engineer, Mr. Gowen. That suit recognized Mr. Gowen as the engineer in charge. These sums were disallowed, as were also his claims under the second or supplemental contract, and judgment was entered in his favor for the amount found due, with interest, under the first contract, $44,536.99. Another suit was then begun to recover the amount claimed under the second contract, and in this judgment was rendered for the defendant.

Now, for the first time, is the claim made for services in preparing plans and specifications. We cannot resist the conclusion that, in view of all the facts and circumstances, and the prior conduct of this plaintiff, this claim is in the nature of an afterthought. It lacks merit, and is not substantiated by convincing proof.

Judgment for defendants.

(117 Me. 385)

STEWART v. INHABITANTS OF YORK.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Oct. 10, 1918.)

1. TOWNS ~~§~~37—VOTE AT TOWN MEETING—AUTHORITY TO COMMITTEE.

A vote at town meeting, in terms merely authorizing a committee, which should serve without pay, to build a bridge and approaches, does not empower it to employ counsel and incur expenses for legal services in behalf of the town.

2. TOWNS ~~§~~39(1)—COMMITTEE—UNAUTHORIZED EMPLOYMENT OF ATTORNEY—RIGHT OF RECOVERY.

Where, without authority to do so, committee assumed to employ attorney as counsel at expense of town, he was bound to take notice of their limited authority and dealt with them at his peril.

3. TOWNS ~~§~~80—COMMITTEE—APPOINTMENT AND DISMISSAL—SUBSEQUENT ACTS.

A committee appointed by a town meeting being dismissed from further service by a subsequent town meeting, its later acts on behalf of the town are void.

Report from Supreme Judicial Court, York County, at Law.

Action by John C. Stewart against the inhabitants of York. On report from trial court. Judgment for defendant.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

John C. Stewart, of York Village, for plaintiff. E. P. Spinney, of No. Berwick, and J. O. Bradbury, of Saco, for defendant.

CORNISH, O. J. This suit is brought by an attorney to recover for professional services alleged to have been rendered to the defendant town, and for expenses incurred in connection therewith, between November 17, 1906, and July 14, 1911, aggregating $1,514.76. There is no controversy over the fact that the plaintiff was employed from time to time by the majority of a committee chosen by the town at a special town meeting held October 13, 1906, to construct a bridge and approaches across York river as laid out by the county commissioners, that he rendered the services charged for, and that the charges are fair and reasonable. The single point at issue is whether the town of York is liable therefor.

The building of this York bridge has been fruitful in litigation. It is apparent from the history of the entire transaction that the inhabitants of the town were divided into two earnest and at times warring factions over the advisability of constructing the bridge, and the proposition was bitterly fought step by step.

It is needless to enter upon the details, which have been set forth in full in Blaisdell v. York, 110 Me. 500, 87 Atl. 361, further than to say that at a town meeting held on October 13, 1906, the pro-bridge faction prevailed by a vote of 174 in favor, to 123 opposed, and a committee of four was chosen to act in conjunction with the selectmen in building the bridge; said committee to act without pay. This was the only vote passed by the town directing the construction of the bridge, and the only authority given to this joint committee of seven under this vote was to build the bridge. Friction at once arose between the selectmen, who were apparently of the anti-bridge faction, and the remaining four members who represented the pro-bridge faction, as to their respective powers and duties, and the result was the withdrawal of the selectmen on October 22, 1906, from further participation in the work of the committee. The remaining four, however, continued to exercise the authority given by the town, and on December 5, 1906, entered into a written contract with one Blaisdell to construct the bridge and approaches for the sum of $39,500. The opposition seems to have gained in strength during the winter, because at the annual town meeting held on March 11, 1907, it was voted that the committee of four appointed on October 13, 1906, be dismissed from further service. This committee paid no heed to this vote, continued to act as before in pushing forward the construction of the bridge, and made a supplemental contract in connection therewith on October 17, 1907, remaining in charge until the completion of the work in the spring of 1908.

Litigation arose in various forms and at various times, and for his professional services in connection with this litigation the plaintiff has brought this suit against the town.

[1] It is obvious that the action cannot be maintained because the plaintiff has failed to show his employment by the town or by any authorized agent thereof. The question of employment of counsel in this litigation was never considered by the municipality itself. The only action taken by the municipality is expressed in the vote of October 13, 1906, before recited, which merely authorized the committee to build the bridge and the approaches. This vote undoubtedly empowered the committee to take such steps as might be necessary and incidental to their main duty, the material construction of the bridge, such as the selection of an engineer, the obtaining of plans and specifications, the advertising for bids, and the awarding and executing of the contract of December 5, 1906, as was held in Blaisdell v. York, 110 Me. 500, 518, 87 Atl. 361. But by no stretch of legal intendment can that vote be held to authorize the committee to employ counsel and incur expenses for legal services in behalf of the town in connection with litigation which might arise in the future. That was no part of their duty, and was beyond the scope of the power conferred upon them. Butler v. Charlestown, 7 Gray (Mass.) 12; Fletcher v. Lowell, 15 Gray (Mass.) 103.

The very terms of the vote passed by the municipality negated the incurring of any expense outside the material construction of the bridge and approaches. It expressly provided that the committee should serve without pay. Care was taken to avoid expense. It cannot with reason be urged that such a restrictive vote conferred upon the committee the power to incur counsel fees at the expense of the town.

[2] The committee having no legal power to employ counsel, it is equally true that the plaintiff in dealing with them was bound to take notice of their limited authority. He dealt with them at his peril and as it was his duty to ascertain the extent of their power to bind the town, if the persons assuming to act did so without authority he cannot recover of the town. Goodrich v. Waterville, 88 Me. 39, 33 Atl. 659; Blaisdell v. York, 110 Me. 500, 521, 87 Atl. 361; Morse v. Montville, 115 Me. 454, 458, 99 Atl. 438.

[3] This rule of law applies to and annihilates the plaintiff's entire bill, but it should be observed that whatever limited power had been given to the committee by the vote of October 13, 1906, was revoked by the town by the vote of March 11, 1907, when the committee was dismissed from further servvoid. Blaisdell v. York, 110 Me. 500, 520, 87 Atl. 361. The amount of the charges prior to March 11, 1907, is $227.29, and the amount subsequent thereto is $1,237.47. The plaintiff does not claim a single employment by the committee covering the entire time, but simply separate employments from time to time as the various occasions arose for legal services.

The foregoing principles would prevent recovery in this case as a matter of law, even if the services charged had been rendered in behalf of the town and had been beneficial to the town as a matter of fact. But the record shows the contrary. In part of the litigation, the town of York was not a party, and in those cases where the town was a party it was represented by other counsel, while the plaintiff appeared as counsel for the adverse party.

Thus the first litigation for which the plaintiff claims compensation was a bill in equity brought by the selectmen against the four members of the special committee in November, 1906, to restrain those members from proceeding. That was a controversy between the two factions in the joint committee of seven. The plaintiff appeared as counsel for the four, and other counsel appeared for the selectmen, the remaining three. The town was not a party.

The second group of charges cover services before a legislative committee February 14-18, 1907, in securing an act ratifying the action of the town at its meeting of October 13, 1906, and authorizing the construction of the bridge. The plaintiff admits that there was no vote of the town authorizing him to appear in its behalf, and it is evident from the history of the case that the securing of this legislation was the act of the pro-bridge faction of the joint committee.

The third group of charges embrace services and expenses in connection with a bill in equity brought in April, 1907, by Elizabeth B. Bliss, an abutting owner, against the county commissioners of York county, the selectmen of the town, the special committee of four, and the contractor Blaisdell, praying for an injunction. In this litigation the plaintiff admits that he represented the committee of four and Mr. Blaisdell. The selectmen had their own counsel, the county commissioners theirs, and no one appeared for the town of York, as it was not a party to the proceedings. This case found its way to the law court twice. Bliss v. Junkins, 106 Me. 128, 75 Atl. 386; Id., 107 Me. 425, 78 Atl. 478.

The fourth group of charges relate to mandamus proceedings brought by Blaisdell, the contractor, against the county commissioners, in which the plaintiff appeared as

The fifth group pertains to services rendered in connection with mandamus proceedings brought by Blaisdell against the town clerk of York to compel him to change his record. In these proceedings the plaintiff represented the petitioner Blaisdell, and the town was not a party.

There are other small charges for services before the United States engineers in July, 1907, at the request of the committee after they had been dismissed, for services in a trespass suit brought by Bliss against Blaisdell in which the plaintiff appeared for Blaisdell (Bliss v. Blaisdell, 110 Me. 527, 87 Atl. 361), and in the first suit brought by Blaisdell against the town of York, in which also the plaintiff appeared for Blaisdell and against the town. All services and charges, however, come within the characterization above given. None were rendered in behalf of the municipality nor for its benefit. The plaintiff admits that he was counsel for the four of the committee during the entire period, and for Mr. Blaisdell continuously after July 17, 1907. He acted for Blaisdell in all his litigation against the town, recovering in one case a judgment in the sum of $44,536.99. These parties were his clients, not the town of York, and the municipality should not be compelled to pay for the services rendered.

Judgment for defendant.

(117 Me. 291)

HARRIS v. MOSES et al.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Oct. 14, 1918.)

1. WILLS ~~684~~(3)—TRUSTS—CAPITAL OR INCOME—STOCK DIVIDEND FROM EARNINGS.

In absence of indication of testator's intention as to whether stock dividend, from earnings, be distributed as income among life tenants or held as part of corpus of trust estate for remaindermen, it must be held for remaindermen, and not distributed, as dividends may be, as income among surviving life tenants.

2. WILLS ~~707~~(3)—ACTION TO CONSTRUCT—COSTS AND EXPENSES.

Where testamentary trustee was justified in seeking instructions of court as to whether stock dividend was income or principal, fund from dividend should contribute towards costs of litigation, including counsel fees of complainant's and respondents' solicitors, to be fixed and allowed by the sitting justice.

Report from Supreme Judicial Court, Cumberland County, in Equity.

Suit by Benjamin F. Harris against Oliver Moses and others. On report to the Supreme Judicial Court. Decree in accordance with the opinion.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, BIRD, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Symonds, Snow, Cook & Hutchinson, of Portland, for complainant. Payson & Virgin and John H. Pierce, all of Portland, for respondents.

BIRD, J. This bill in equity is brought by one of the trustees under the will of Oliver Moses, deceased, against his two co-trustees and the children, grandchildren, and the great and great great grandchildren of the testator, asking the instructions of this court as to the disposition of a stock dividend declared upon stock of the Worumbo Manufacturing Company held by said trustees as part of the trust estate.

Answers have been filed by all the defendants, except one of the remaindermen, against whom the bill has been taken pro confesso. The general effect of the answers is to admit the allegations of the bill, at least in so far as to enable the court to reach the conclusion at which it has arrived.

The case is reported upon the bill as amended, the answers of the defendants, the exhibits annexed to bill and answers, together with the stipulation of counsel as to facts and the order of court reporting the case.

The provisions of the will of Oliver Moses instituting and regulating the trust are as follows:

"6. All the rest and residue of my estate, real, personal and mixed, whether now in possession or hereafter acquired, I give, devise and bequeath unto the said Galen O. Moses, Frank O. Moses and Benjamin F. Harris in trust to the uses following; that is to say: I devise and direct that out of the net income remaining, after paying all proper charges and expenses, the trustees shall pay to my said wife such sums of money as she shall from time to time desire, and the residue thereof divide in quarter annual payments equally among my children, Frank O. Moses, Galen O. Moses, Harriet S. Knight, wife of George H. Knight, Annie E. Harris, wife of Benjamin F. Harris, and Wealthy O. Hinds, wife of Rev. John W. Hinds, so long as they all shall live.

"7. In case the share of the said income falling to each of my children living shall in any year fall below two thousand five hundred dollars, the trustees at the end of the year are to make the shares up to that sum out of the principal of the trust estate.

"8. If during the period of the said trust any of my said children shall die without issue the division of the income is to be made among the survivors of them. But if the child so dying without issue shall leave a husband or wife, I give, bequeath and devise unto such surviving husband or wife one-fourth part of that portion of the trust fund or estate corresponding to the portion of the income to which such deceased child was entitled at the time of his or her demise, the income of the residue to be divided as above provided, except as hereinafter to be provided."

Item 9 of the will provides for the disposition of the trust fund upon the decease of the children of the testator.

The trustees or their predecessors in the trust received from the estate of the testator and retained as part of the trust fund sundry shares of the corporation named above, which at the date of the vote of the stockholders, quoted below, numbered 886. On the 23d day of February, A. D. 1917, the stockholders of the corporation passed the following vote:

"Voted: That five thousand (5,000) shares of new capital stock be issued at par to stockholders of record this 23d day of February, 1917, in proportion to their present holding, one share of new stock for each share now owned, and that an extra dividend of 100 per cent., payable in stock, be paid to stockholders of record of February 23, 1917, on March 15, 1917."

The vote was carried into execution, and the number of shares held by the trustees was 1,772 at the time of the filing of the bill.

The complainant claims that the stock dividend was declared from earnings of the corporation. This is not seriously questioned by respondents, and we find such to be the fact. The complainant urges that consequently the shares representing the stock dividend be so apportioned that the value of the trust fund be unimpaired and the remainder be divided among the life beneficiaries—the three and only surviving children of the testator.

The will gives no indication of any intention entertained by the testator as to whether or not a stock dividend declared from earnings of the corporation be distributed as income among the life tenants or held by the trustees as part of the corpus of the estate for the benefit of the remaindermen.

"In ascertaining the rights of such persons, the intention of the testator, so far as manifested by him, must of course control; but when he has given no special direction upon the question as to what shall be considered principal and what income, he must be presumed to have had in view the lawful power of the corporation over the use and apportionment of its earnings, and to have intended that the determination of that question should depend upon the regular action of the corporation with regard to all its shares." Gibbons v. Mahon, 136 U. S. 549, 559, 10 Sup. Ct. 1057, 1058 (34 L. Ed. 525).

The complainant evidently relies upon the dictum in Gilkey v. Paine, to the effect that the integrity of the capital should be maintained and all surplus earnings, in whatever form distributed, be given to the life tenant. 80 Me. 319, 325, 14 Atl. 205. This expression was unnecessary for the determination of that case. See Thatcher v. Thatcher, 117 Me. 331, 104 Atl. 515.

The case under consideration cannot, we think, be distinguished from the case of Thatcher v. Thatcher, supra.

And the court takes this opportunity to state that, in the determination of that case, not only did the court have the assistance of the admirable and exhaustive brief of the solicitor for the complainant trustees, but also of the like briefs of the solicitors in the instant case.

[1] In conformity with the opinion in that case, we must hold that the stock dividend declared by the Worumbo Manufacturing Company is to be held by the trustees in trust for the remaindermen, and not distributed, as may the dividends thereon, as income among the surviving life tenants.

sets rule (see Thatcher v. Thatcher, supra, and the dictum with which the opinion in Gilkey v. Paine, supra, closes), we think the complainant was justified in seeking the instructions of the court, and that it is reasonable and, as and for the reasons stated in Richardson v. Richardson, 75 Me. at page 577, 46 Am. Rep. 428, that the fund arising from the dividend contribute towards the costs and expenses of the litigation, the latter to include the reasonable counsel fees of the solicitors of the complainant and respondents, to be fixed and allowed by the sitting justice. The respondents, however, are to be allowed but one bill of costs. See, also, Bailey v. Worster, 103 Me. 170, 178, 68 Atl. 698.

Decree accordingly.

(117 Me. 402)

McELWEE v. MAHLMAN.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Oct. 16, 1918.)

1. BOUNDARIES §46(1) — DETERMINATION — RIGHTS OF OWNERS.

Where land was platted into lots, all parties in interest could rearrange the lines, on completion of the survey, and a subsequent purchaser took to the new line and not the surveyed line.

2. DEEDS §38(3) — DESCRIPTION — AMBIGUITY.

Where land was platted into lots 1, 2, and 3, and the owners subsequently changed the lines, a deed of lot 2, calling for the line of lot 1, but giving distances showing invasion of lot 1, and a deed conveying "a certain lot" meaning "all our interest" in lot 1, giving distances corresponding to the new lines, were not ambiguous, but conveyed according to the new and not the platted lines.

3. DEEDS §112(1) — PLATS — INTENT.

Reference to a plan is only to aid in ascertaining the intention of the parties.

4. DEEDS §40 — REFERENCE TO PLAT — EFFECT.

If a plat is referred to in a deed as part of the description, it becomes a material and essential part of the conveyance with same effect as if copied into the deed.

Report from Supreme Judicial Court, Washington County, at Law.

Action by Lillian McElwee against Marietta Mahlman. Case reported. Judgment for plaintiff.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, and PHILBROOK, JJ.

L. H. Newcomb, of Eastport, and J. H. Gray, of Lubec, for plaintiff. H. E. Saunders, of Lubec, and H. H. Gray, of Millbridge, for defendant.

HANSON, J. This is a real action, and is before the court on report.

The question at issue involves the location of the line dividing lots owned by the contending parties—the plaintiff's south line and defendant's north line.

All the land in question was originally owned by the heirs of Patrick Gillise, late divided into lots by George W. Ross, an engineer, whose plan of the lots in question was introduced in evidence. The survey made in 1902. According to Mr. Ross, lot No. 1 was 70 feet wide on C street; lots No. 2 and No. 3 were each 60 feet wide on said street. The line remained as originally located until April 1904, when H. P. Gillise and Annie T. Gillise conveyed their two-thirds interest in lot 2 to F. N. Gillise, and in addition they moved the northerly side of lot 2 10 feet from the northerly side of lot 1 and at the same time changed the Ross line by drawing a new line upon the plan representing the north line of No. 1 and the south line of No. 2. Up to this time no other conveyances had been made by the heirs. May 5, 1904, Frank N. Gillise purchased of Archibald J. Black a small lot 12 feet wide, and 13 feet long, in the southeast corner of lot No. 2, to square the corner. On the same day, F. N. Gillise deeded a triangular strip of land from the north line of lot No. 2, 2 feet wide on Gillise street, running to a point 50 feet southeast on the north line, to Stephen Somers, the owner of lot No. 3.

The foregoing statement of title and history of the locus is presented for a better understanding of the real question involved. It will be noted that on May 5, 1904, the rights of parties other than the heirs of Patrick Gillise were not brought in question. The survey and plan had been made and accepted by the parties in interest; one deed between the heirs made, which involved a change in the plan. The change in the plan was made on July 1, 1904, Frank N. Gillise conveyed the land thus acquired, which for purposes of this case comprised all of original lot numbered 2, and 8 feet from the northerly side of lot No. 1, to Linda Ingalls, who occupied the land until April 24, 1914, when she conveyed the same to the plaintiff. That deed has the following descriptions:

"Commencing at the southeast corner of Stephen Somers' homestead lot (lot No. 3), thence in a course nearly south forty-seven feet and six inches to the north line of lot No. 1, as per the Gillise field, so called, by Geo. W. Ross, thence westerly on said north line of lot No. 1 sixty-six feet and eight inches to Gillise at so called, thence northerly along said Gillise street fifty-three feet to the homestead lot of said Stephen Somers, thence easterly along Somers south line sixty-eight feet to the place beginning."

[1] It will be noted that, while the description refers to the plan made by George W. Ross, the distances given are specific, exact, and deliberate, and extend the width of lot No. 2, over the Ross line and into lot No. 1, where it had been relocated by the parties in interest after Mr. Ross finished his survey. This we think owners had a right to do, especially as other interests had not intervened, and assuredly so as to the defendant whose title comes from the same source, and after the new line had been established for 12 years, and had been recognized by all concerned.

The defendant acquired title through a deed from Lella E. Gillise and Mary T. Gillise, by deed dated July 17, 1916, the description in which deed is identical with that in a deed from F. N. Gillise to them, and reads:

"A certain lot or parcel of land situated in said Lubec and more particularly bounded and described as follows, to wit, beginning at the southeasterly corner of said lot, where the westerly line, at the southwesterly corner of land owned by Charles or Mary Mulholland, of said Lubec, intersects with Main street, so called; thence running westerly fifty-five feet, more or less, to a new street, Gillise street, so called; thence northerly, sixty feet, more or less, to property formerly owned by F. N. Gillise, now owned by McElwee, thence easterly fifty-four feet, more or less, to said Mulholland's line; thence southerly sixty feet, more or less, to the place of beginning. Meaning and intending to convey all of my said interest in and to said parcel of land, known on a plan of the Gillise estate as lot No. 1, said plan having been drawn by George W. Ross, civil engineer, in 1902."

[2, 3] Counsel have asserted that there is ambiguity in the description; but none is perceived. On the contrary, this, the latest deed, contains in the description evidence of full knowledge of the parties as to the changes made in the original plan, and the widening of lot No. 2, and consequent decrease in lot No. 1. The grantors were not deeding lot No. 1. The description clearly states that they were conveying their interest in lot No. 1, and the Ross plan was not made a part of the deed, or referred to any further than to locate a certain lot No. 1, in which they were selling all their interest. That interest was an interest in lot No. 1 on the Ross plan, as changed by the parties, before any right had been acquired by the defendant. The wording of the description clearly shows the intention of the parties to be that the grantors were selling what they knew to be a parcel of land from lot No. 1, and not lot No. 1 as originally laid out. The description was indefinite, every mention of distance was qualified by the use of the words "more or less," and the northerly bound was "property now owned by McElwee." The language used is not ambiguous, and the defendant must be charged with knowledge of the change in the plan, and the new line by which the property "now owned by McElwee" was limited. The plan was made for the Gillise heirs. They had the right to change a line, or make smaller lots of larger ones, if they saw fit; and the rights of others were not interfered with by the change. Our duty under the report is to ascertain the intention of the parties, and so find that such intention shall be carried out. In reaching our conclusion the oral testimony has thrown some light, but the deeds introduced, especially the deed to the defendant, considered in connection with the plan, clearly establish what the oral testimony tends to show, that the defendant is limited on the north by the new line fixed by the Gillise heirs, and not by a line fixed by Mr. Ross. The use of the plan in the case, as in all cases, is limited to the one purpose, as an aid to ascertain the intention of the parties. In considering the same subject, the text of volume 8, R. C. L. 134, states the law in these words:

"The words of reference usually serve merely to connect the deed with the plat, so that by applying the one to the other the former may be rendered intelligible. They give effect to the expressions of the deed, but they do not limit them. If there is that upon the face of the plat to which the expressions of the deed can apply, then the court will make the application, rather than reject the words of the deed as not expressing the intentions of the parties."

If it was the intention to convey the original lot, then it could have been done by deeding lot No. 1, as per plan, etc., or by giving the exact boundaries. This course was not taken. On the contrary, the opposite course, and one which most decidedly sustains the plaintiff's contention, was taken, and was adopted by the defendant, when every line and distance was qualified by the use of the words "more or less." These words, used in connection with the words "now the property of McElwee," can only imply that the defendant's north line must be the south line of the plaintiff's land, according to the deed under which she and her grantor had occupied the land many years, the bounds of which were definite and unqualified.

[4] This is not a case where a plan is referred to as a part of a description of a lot of land. Danforth v. Bangor, 85 Me. 423, 27 Atl. 268. Or where a grant of land is made with reference to a plan. Heaton v. Hodges, 14 Me. 66, 18 Am. Dec. 731, and cases cited. If so referred to in a proper case, the map or plan designated would become a material and essential part of the conveyance with the same force and effect as if copied into the deed. 8 R. C. L. 135, and cases cited, including Kennebec Purchase v. Tiffany, 1 Greenl. 219, 10 Am. Dec. 60; Ripley v. Berry, 5 Greenl. 24, 17 Am. Dec. 201.

Here the reference to the plan was solely for the purpose of locating a lot, out of which the land was deeded, and was not a part of the description of the land conveyed. Applying the rule by which our court has been guided since its formation, that the expressed intention of the parties gathered from all parts of the instrument, giving each word its due force, and read in the light of existing conditions, must govern our action, we find for the plaintiff. Perry v. Buswell, 113 Me. 399, 94 Atl. 483.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Parties to be heard in damages by the clerk.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. INSURANCE ~~65914~~—JITNEY BUSES—INSURANCE POLICY—BENEFITS.

Under the act P. L. 1916, p. 283, entitled "An act concerning auto busses, commonly called jitneys, and their operation in cities," a policy of insurance for $5,000 is required to be delivered to the chief fiscal officer of the city when the consent and license to operate such auto bus is obtained. The policy is for the benefit of persons injured, as a result of an accident occurring from the operation of such auto bus upon the public streets of the city. Held, the injured person may sue directly the insurance company on the policy, as prescribed by the statute, on a judgment recovered against the auto bus owner, for damages occasioned as a result of an accident in the operation of the auto bus on the public streets. The injured person's rights are original and primary not derivative and secondary under the statute.

2. STATUTES ~~6121~~(1)—SUBJECT AND TITLE—JITNEY BUS LAW.

The above act does not offend against article 4, § 7, par. 4, of the state Constitution, which provides every law shall embrace but one object and that shall be expressed in the title.

3. INSURANCE ~~6626~~—JITNEY BUSES—ACTION ON INSURANCE POLICY—SERVICE ON CITY OFFICER.

The statute does not require process to be served on the chief fiscal officer of the city, in the original suit, between the person injured and the auto bus owner.

Appeal from District Court of Orange.

Action by Grace Gillard against the Manufacturers' Casualty Insurance Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued June term, 1918, before BERGEN, KALISCH, and BLACK, JJ.

Pomerehne & Laible and Jacob L. Newman, all of Newark, for appellant. Arthur B. Seymour, of Orange, for respondent.

BLACK, J. The plaintiff in this case on June 28, 1917, was injured in a collision, between an automobile which she was driving and a jitney bus driven by John Bono, a chauffeur for Andrew Wanzkye. She sued Andrew Wanzkye on the 13th day of September, 1917, and recovered, in the Orange district court, a judgment against him, for her injuries, for the sum of $100 and costs. This judgment was entered by default and has not been paid. At the time of the accident Andrew Wanzkye was operating a jitney bus, under a license or consent granted by the proper authorities of the city of Newark, along Elizabeth avenue, a public street in Newark, where the accident occurred. The license or consent was granted under an act of the Legislature entitled "An act concerning auto busses, commonly called jitneys, and their operation in cities," P. L. 1916, p. 283. Andrew Wanzkye filed with the chief policy of insurance, issued by the company, in the sum of $5,000. The plaintiff then sued the defendant, the company, upon the policy of insurance to recover payment of her judgment. It was given for the plaintiff. The plea that judgment is attacked in this The record does not show the testimony no point is made of that fact, on a judgment was recovered by Grace the plaintiff, against Andrew Wanzkye dering him liable for negligence, the record of the suit in the Orange court was put in evidence, and the demand states a cause of action based on negligence in driving defendant's auto. The appellant files six reasons or contentions why it is dissatisfied in point with the determination of the district court. But they are argued in the appellant under three heads.

[1] The first ground of attack is that the rights of the plaintiff are derivative and not no more extensive than the rights of the insured. This is a false assumption. The answer is, on the contrary, the rights of the plaintiff are original and primary under the statute, which provides (P. L. 1916, p. 283, § 2): There must be a consent of a board or body having control of the public streets, for the operation of an auto bus. Such consent shall become effective and the operation shall be permitted, until the expiration of such auto bus in any city, shall be given by the chief fiscal officer of the city, in writing. The auto bus shall be licensed and operated under an insurance policy in $5,000 "against liability imposed by law upon the auto bus owner for damages on account of bodily injury or death suffered by a person or persons as a result of an accident occurring by reason of the ownership, maintenance or use of such auto bus upon the public streets of such city, and such insurance shall continue effective and such operation shall be permitted only so long as such insurance shall remain in force; such insurance shall provide for the payment of an amount of judgment recovered by any person on account of the ownership, maintenance and use of such auto bus or any fault in respect to such auto bus and shall be for the benefit of every person suffering loss, damage or injury as a result of such accident." Then follows a provision for a copy of the policy to be executed by the owner of the auto bus to be delivered to the fiscal officer of the city for the purpose of acknowledging service of process of a court of competent jurisdiction to be served against the insured by virtue of the indemnity granted under the insurance policy filed. By virtue of this provision of the statute, the plaintiff alone can sue on the policy required to be filed. This is an essential distinguishing feature, that class of cases, where there is no right of action, because the parties to the suit are not parties to the agreement sued on, as in Hall v. Passaic Water Co., 83 N. J. Law, 771, 85 Atl. 349, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 750; Baum v. Somerville Water Co., 84 N. J. Law, 611, 87 Atl. 140, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 966; Standard Gas Power Corp. v. New England Casualty Co., 90 N. J. Law, 570, 101 Atl. 281. The auto bus owner cannot sue on the statutory policy of insurance. It is true that, under the policy filed, the auto bus owner has certain defined rights. But a special policy is required to be filed by the statute, against loss from the liability imposed by law, upon the auto bus owner for damages, on account of bodily injury, etc.

The insurance policy cannot contain any provisions except those authorized by the statute, so as to affect any person suffering loss, as provided therein. Whatever other provisions the filed policy contains may be good as between the insurer and the insured auto bus owner, and may impose upon the latter certain duties and obligations toward the owner, for breach of which the insurer can maintain an action; but such provisions cannot deprive an injured person of the remedy given by the statute, nor can they in any way abridge the rights granted by the statute to such injured person. The policy of insurance is filed only for the benefit of persons who might suffer injury. It is not filed for the benefit of the city. The city is under no liability which the policy indemnifies it against. The statute was passed only for the benefit of the injured person. The sole beneficiary of the statute is the person injured. The injured person is the only one who can sue under the policy, and cite the statute in support of the action. The injured person's rights in the policy of insurance are original and primary, not derivative and secondary. The first ground of attack therefore falls, because the premise on which the argument is based is not true in point of fact.

[2] It is next argued that the act P. L. 1916, p. 283, is unconstitutional, because the title, which is in these words, "An act concerning auto busses, commonly called jitneys, and their operation in cities," offends against article 4, § 7, par. 4, of the state Constitution, which provides, every law shall embrace but one object and that shall be expressed in the title, the argument made is, if the act is intended to affect the contract of insurance, it cannot answer the test that the object expressed in the title must give notice of the effect of the legislation to one conversant with the existing state of the law, citing Sawter v. Shoenthal, 83 N. J. Law, 499, 502, 83 Atl. 1004; but in that case, it was said, the validity of the title is not to be determined by mere distinctions of etymology or definition of words, but by the facts of the case and the history of the legislation. Language which at one time may be quite inadequate to warn the public of the object of the legislation may at another, owing to custom or usage, be entirely sufficient. The title of the act is concerned with the operation of auto busses, commonly called "jitneys." This is the object of the law, the conditions prescribed, such as filing an insurance policy for the benefit of an injured person is germane to the subject of its operation. That is its product, as has been happily expressed by Mr. Justice Garrison, with quaint terseness:

"The object of every law, by force of the Constitution, must be single and be expressed in the title of the law; the product may be as diverse as the object requires and finds its expression in the terms of the enactment only. In fine, the title of an act is a label, not an index." Moore v. Burdett, 62 N. J. Law, 163, 40 Atl. 631.

There are many cases in our courts, illustrating the application of this provision to legislation. It would be profitless to go over them in detail. In Newark v. Mount Pleasant Cemetery Co., 58 N. J. Law, 168, 171, 33 Atl. 396, it was said, the evil intended to be guarded against was not the inclusion in one act of more than a single matter, but the inclusion therein of matters not properly related among themselves. See Stockton v. Central R. R. Co., 50 N. J. Eq. 52, 70, 24 Atl. 964, 17 L. R. A. 97; Allen v. Board of Education, 81 N. J. Law, 135, 141, 79 Atl. 101—in which many cases are cited.

We think there is no constitutional infirmity in the title of this statute, and therefore this ground of attack must fail.

[3] It is next urged that process should have been served on the chief fiscal officer of the city of Newark, in the suit between this plaintiff, Grace Gallard, and Andrew Wanzky, the auto bus owner; that the statute requires it, and such failure was fatal to the plaintiff under the statute. The answer to this is, the appellant misconstrues the provision of the statute, on which reliance is placed. The statute provides that a power of attorney shall be delivered to the fiscal officer concurrently with the filing of the policy wherein the auto bus owner shall nominate and appoint the fiscal officer his true and lawful attorney, for the purpose of acknowledging service of any process out of a court of competent jurisdiction, to be served against the insured by virtue of the indemnity granted under the insurance policy filed.

Process to be served against the insured does not mean process to be served against the insurer. This, also, is for the benefit of the person injured, so that the auto bus owner cannot escape the process of the courts. Nowhere in the statute is there any provision providing for service of process on the chief fiscal officer of the city in the original action against the auto bus owner the insured. This point is without legal merit.

The judgment of the Orange district court is affirmed, with costs.

(92 N. J. Law, 146)

GILLAND v. MANUFACTURERS' CASUALTY INS. CO.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. Sept. 27, 1918.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)INSURANCE §=157—INSURANCE POLICY—"INJURY"—"DAMAGE"—"LOSS."

The words, "injury," "damage," "loss," in an accident insurance policy filed under Act March 17, 1916 (P. L. p. 283, c. 136), known as the auto bus or jitney act, include damages to personal property, such as damage to an automobile (citing Words and Phrases, First Series, Damage, Injury, Loss).

Appeal from District Court of Orange.

Action by Charles Gilland against the Manufacturers' Casualty Insurance Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued June term, 1918, before BERGEN, KALISCH, and BLACK, JJ.

Pomerehne & Laible and Jacob L. Newman, all of Newark, for appellant. Arthur S. Seymour, of Orange, for appellee.

BLACK, J. The facts of this case are fully set out in the case of Grace Gillard against the same defendant, 104 Atl. 707, in an opinion filed the present term. In this case; however, there is an additional point, not involved in that case, viz. whether the policy of insurance filed by the defendant company covers damages to personal property. We think the contract of insurance is not limited to personal injuries. The words used by the insurance company to express its contract are as follows: Suits, "on account of injuries sustained by any person or persons"; "including suits alleging such injuries and demanding damages therefor"; "resulting in injuries or death sustained by any person or persons"; "shall be for the benefit of every person suffering loss, damage or injury as described in this contract or as described in the terms of the act" P. L. 1916, p. 283, c. 136.

There is nothing to suggest that by the use of the words "injuries," "damages," "loss," personal injuries, damages or loss were only intended; nor do these words in their definition exclude injuries or damage to property. These words mean destruction or impairment of value, injury or harm. "Injury" means any wrong done or suffered; thus, we speak of an injury or damage to the person, to character, or to reputation, as well as to property. 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1812; 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3613; 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4232. Sometimes the word "damage" is used to denote a partial destruction, while "loss" is more properly used to denote absolute or total destruction. It is quite true, the contract speaks of limiting the liability for one person injured to $5,000, and the statute P. L. 1916, p. 283, c. 136, § 2, speaks of "damages on account of bodily injury or death suffered." If these were the only words used in the contract or statute descriptive of the liability covered by the insurance, there might be some force in the contention that the policy covered only injuries to the person or death suffered.

We think the contract is broad enough to cover damages to personal property. The judgment is therefore affirmed, with costs.

(92 N. J. Law, 185)

STATE v. TAYLOR.

(Supreme Court of New Jersey. Aug. 21, 1918.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW §=824(1) — REQUEST FOR INSTRUCTIONS.

Error cannot be assigned upon a failure to instruct the jury, in the absence of a request therefor.

2. CONSPIRACY §=27—OVERT ACT.

A mere conspiracy to defraud a county board is insufficient to constitute a crime, unless some overt act charged in the indictment is committed.

3. CRIMINAL LAW §=371(1, 12)—EVIDENCE—OTHER OFFENSES.

In a prosecution for conspiracy to defraud a county board, evidence tending to prove a distinct offense, unrelated to the offense charged, was not irrelevant as to motive and intent.

4. CRIMINAL LAW §=380—EVIDENCE—REPUTATION—PARTICULAR FACTS.

In a prosecution for conspiracy to defraud a county board, a question as to whether witness and defendant had not put in considerable time in evolving a scheme for the drawing of jurors which would limit the chance for a fraud such as the one charged, was properly excluded, since particular facts and circumstances are inadmissible to show reputation.

5. CONSPIRACY §=45—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a prosecution for conspiracy to defraud a county board, it was error to exclude evidence that a codefendant was for weeks mentally incompetent on account of the excessive use of liquor, as bearing on the probability of defendant entering into the conspiracy with such a person.

Error to Court of Quarter Sessions, Essex County.

Frank E. Taylor was convicted of conspiracy, and he brings error. Reversed.

Argued February term, 1918, before GUM-MERE, C. J., and KALISCH, J.

Wilbur A. Helsley, of Newark, for plaintiff in error. J. Henry Harrison, Prosecutor of the Pleas, of Newark, for the State.

KALISCH, J. The record in this case discloses a conviction and judgment thereon of the plaintiff in error, indicted jointly with one James F. Cowan, of a criminal conspiracy to cheat and defraud the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Essex, of its moneys, goods, chattels, and property. Cowan pleaded non vult to the indictment, was called as a witness for the state, and gave testimony tending to establish the commission of the offense, by the defendants, as charged against them in the indictment. The indictment contains but a single count, which charges that the defendants named therein did wickedly, corruptly, knowingly, and unlawfully conspire, combine, confederate, and agree together fraudulently and falsely to cheat and defraud the board of chosen freeholders of the county of Essex of divers large sums of money, to wit, etc. Here follow charges of the various fraudulent and unlawful means alleged to have been used by the defendants, and of the several overt acts committed by them to accomplish and to carry into effect the unlawful agreement. Five overt acts are laid in the indictment, in each of which is set forth the name of the person with whom the defendants acted, and through whom the defendants were enabled and succeeded in obtaining money unlawfully from the board of chosen freeholders.

The record is a voluminous one, containing 40 assignments of errors, and 13 specifications of causes for reversal. We propose to deal only with those which have been argued orally before us and those relied on in the brief of counsel of plaintiff in error. The first 15 assignments of error and all of the specifications of causes for reversal deal with the admission in evidence of acts not charged as "overt acts" in the indictment, and the rulings of the trial judge regarding the competency of such acts in evidence.

The precise point made by counsel of plaintiff in error, relating to this group of alleged errors, is that the trial judge, against the objection made by counsel, permitted the state to prove acts of 11 individuals, who were not named in the indictment, but whose acts were similar to the "overt acts" mentioned therein, and treated the same as "overt acts" upon which the plaintiff in error could be lawfully convicted, regardless of whether the state proved or did not prove any of the specified overt acts. This assertion is not supported by the record. It does appear that counsel of defendant objected to the introduction of testimony tending to prove other acts of the defendants, in pursuance of the unlawful agreement, with persons other than those mentioned in the indictment, but which acts were similar in character and occurred during the same period of time, whereupon counsel of the state said to the court that he intended to follow it up and connect these acts with those set forth in the indictment, whereupon and upon condition that proof would be made of one or more of the overt acts charged in the indictment, the court admitted the testimony. Proof was subsequently made of the overt acts laid in the indictment.

[1, 2] Counsel of plaintiff in error, in his brief, does not seriously contend that the testimony was inadmissible for all purposes, but frankly admits that it was admissible "for the purpose of proving the fraudulent purpose and intent of the persons involved." But he argues that, the trial judge having admitted such testimony, it became his legal duty "to have expressly told the jury that the evidence of other acts should be considered by them only and solely for the purpose of determining whether Cowan and Taylor were corruptly and fraudulently inclined, as charged, and should have distinctly told the jury that they should not consider such acts as or in lieu of the stated overt acts in the indictment, and that, even if the jurors believed that these other acts were committed, but if they had any reasonable doubt as to every one of the overt acts mentioned in the indictment, the defendant should be acquitted." No request was made of the trial judge, by counsel of defendant, to instruct the jury to the effect as above suggested, and therefore, the trial judge was under no legal duty to do so. Counsel of defendant is in no position to complain of matters which the judge omitted to charge the jury, unless the judge's attention was directed thereto by a request, and such request was refused. Besides all this, however, it appears that the judge, in express terms, instructed the jury that "a mere conspiracy of the kind stated in this indictment is insufficient to constitute a crime, unless some overt act charged in the indictment is committed." This was an accurate statement of the law.

[3] It further appears that counsel of defendant moved to strike out the testimony of the witness Bender upon the ground of irrelevancy, and in that it tended to prove a distinct offense, unrelated to the offense charged in the indictment. The trial judge apparently ignored the application, for he made no ruling whatever. Construing the failure of the court to make a ruling equivalent to a denial of the motion (which is not to be considered as a precedent), we have considered the point raised, and upon examination of the testimony objected to conclude therefrom that the motion to strike out was without any merit. The testimony was relevant on the question of the motive and intent which actuated the defendants, and besides it was a proper procedure for the state to prove the character of the unlawful means adopted by the defendants to carry into effect the conspiracy charged on the indictment, even though those particular unlawful means were not set forth in the indictment, and in themselves constituted an indictable offense, and so long as they were related to the subject-matter of the indictment. The matters argued, under assignments 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20, we find, are without merit.

[4] The twenty-first assignment of error is founded upon the refusal of the trial judge to permit Harry V. Osborne, a witness produced by the defendant, to answer the following question:

"And haven't you and hasn't Mr. Taylor put in considerable time during the last three or four months in evolving a scheme for the drawing of jurors which would practically eliminate, or at least very much limit, the chances for a fraud of this kind, which is embodied in this charge, being perpetrated upon the county?"

This question was properly excluded. It could only have a bearing upon the defendant's character for honesty. It is to be borne in mind, however, that it is firmly settled law that it is only the general reputation of a defendant which can, properly, be put by him in evidence. Particular facts and circumstances tending to establish honest dealings or conduct are inadmissible.

[8] Assignments 22, 23, 24, and 25 relate to the exclusion, by the court, of questions asked of the defendant, by his counsel, which sought to establish by this witness that Cowan was addicted to the excessive use of liquor, and to such an extent that he would be incapacitated for weeks at a time, during which he was mentally incompetent and incoherent, and that these facts were known to the defendant, before and at the time it is alleged that he entered into a conspiracy with Cowan to defraud the county. The purpose of offering this testimony, as stated to the trial court by defendant's counsel, was to have the jury pass upon the question, as a matter of fact:

"Whether or not it is probable that a man in his right senses would make such a combination with a man whom he knows to be for weeks at a time out of his head by the use of intoxicating liquors."

We think the testimony offered was competent, and that its exclusion was error prejudicial to the defendant. It may very well be that the probative force of such testimony is very slight. But that is not a proper matter for a court to deal with. The court cannot legally substitute its judgment for that of the jury, and exclude from the latter's consideration testimony, upon the theory that its evidential value is weak, without depriving a defendant of a constitutional right to the benefit of such testimony, and a jury of one of its most sacred functions—to weigh testimony and make deductions therefrom. If the testimony was competent, its potentiality was for the jury to determine. In the case sub judice there is no ground stated by the trial judge why he ruled the questions out. The nature of the case was such that the state was obliged to resort to the testimony of Cowan, an alleged coconspirator, and to proof of conduct between the defendants, in order to establish the unlawful agreement. Cowan testified as to the criminal compact that existed between him and Taylor to defraud the county.

If it be true that Taylor knew Cowan to be an irresponsible drunkard and given to other vices, the question might naturally arise: Would Taylor, who, according to the testimony, bore an excellent reputation for honesty, and who held an office of trust for many years, without stain, ally himself with a man whose drunkenness might, at any moment, have made him indiscreet, and thereby disclose the fraud that was being perpetrated? Now, in order, for the defendant to have the benefit of the jury's consideration of that important question, it was incumbent upon the defendant to establish, first, as a fact, that Cowan's habits were what the questions put to the defendant aimed to prove, and that the latter knew of such habits before and at the time when the alleged conspiracy was formed. This the court erroneously refused to permit the defendants to do, and therefore the judgment must be reversed. We are not unmindful that it might be fairly argued that men do not seek among the virtuous and honorable for accomplices to commit unlawful deeds; but, even so, that circumstance can only affect the evidential value of the testimony offered, and not its competency, as we have already pointed out.

We have examined the questions raised by the remaining assignments of errors, and find them unmeritorious.

The judgment is reversed.

(89 N. J. Eq. 364)

LACOMBE v. HEADLEY et al. (No. 42/152.)
(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. Aug. 30, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

TAXATION — 768 — TAX DEED — VALIDITY — RECORDING.

A tax collector's deed, given to a purchaser at a tax sale under the Tax Adjustment Act (P. L. 1898, p. 442; 4 Comp. Stat. 1910, p. 5246), is not invalid as against a bona fide purchaser from the prior owner without notice, whose deed is first recorded; the tax collector's deed not being within the purview of section 54 of the act concerning conveyances (2 Comp. Stat. 1910, p. 1553).

Bill to quiet title by August L. Lacombe against Hilda H. Headley and another. Decree advised for complainant.

W. Eugene Turton, of Newark, for complainant. Harold W. Headley, of Newark, for defendants.

LANE, V. C. This is a bill to quiet title. Complainant claims under a tax deed from the tax collector of Irvington, dated September 30, 1909. A sale of the property for unpaid taxes was held on or about February 11, 1909, under the provisions of an act entitled "An act concerning the settlement and collection of arrearages of unpaid taxes, etc., in towns, townships, boroughs, and other municipalities, etc." P. L. 1898, p. 442; 4 Comp. Stat. p. 5246. The deed was never recorded. The defendant Hilda H. Headley claims to be a bona fide purchaser for value, without notice, of the lands, and derives her title through a conveyance made by the heirs of the former owner subsequent to the tax sale. Her contention is that the deed from the tax collector is void as against her under the provisions of section 21 of the act concerning conveyances. 2 Comp. Stat. p. 1541; section 54, 2 Comp. Stat. p. 1553.

The question is squarely presented whether the deed from the collector, given in pursuance of the Tax Adjustment Act, is within the purview of section 54 of the Conveyance Act. Section 21 is unquestionably broad enough to permit the record of a deed given by the collector, for that deed, under the provisions of the Adjustment Act, is to be proved according to law. Section 54 provides:

"Every deed or instrument of the nature or description set forth in the twenty-first section of this act shall, until duly recorded or lodged for record in the said clerk's office, be void and of no effect against subsequent judgment creditors without notice, and against all subsequent bona fide purchasers and mortgagees for valuable consideration, not having notice thereof, whose deed or mortgage shall have been first duly recorded."

Notwithstanding that a tax collector's deed given under the Adjustment Act seems to be within the express language of the statute, I have reached the conclusion that it is not within its purview. The act under which the sale took place provides for the adjustment of the tax by commissioners, confirmation of their report by the circuit court, and the sale of lands by public advertisement. Each stage of the proceeding is conducted with the utmost publicity. Section 6 of the act (4 Comp. Statutes, p. 5251) provides that after the sale the collector shall execute and deliver to the purchaser a certificate of sale; section 7, that any person having an estate in or lien upon the lands may, at any time, up to the expiration of six months from the date of the certificate of sale redeem the lands; section 8, that if the lands have not been redeemed within six months the collector of taxes, at the expiration of said six months, upon the surrender of the certificate, shall execute under the seal of the town, attested by the clerk of the said town and proved according to law, and deliver to the purchaser a deed or conveyance for said lands in fee simple absolute, free and discharged from any estate in or lien upon the same in favor of any person made a party to the proceedings. The deed is made presumptive evidence of title in the grantee. After the sale, the purchaser becomes the equitable owner of the property, subject only to the right of any person interested to redeem within a period of six months. He is entitled to immediate possession. Section 11, 4 Comp. Statutes, p. 5253. Upon the expiration of the six months period the right of redemption of the prior owner is cut off, and the prior owner has no further interest in the property.

During the time after the redemption has ceased, and prior to the delivery of the deed, where the naked legal title resides may be a question; but, if the naked legal title continues to reside in the prior owner, it is such a title as that, by operation of law or proceedings taken under the law, the owner has been deprived of the power to convey or otherwise deal with. The only individual who has the power to execute a document which will evidence a transfer of title is the tax collector. When he executes a deed, he does not do it in the name of the prior owner, but under the seal of the town. The rights of the prior owner are not cut off by the delivery of the deed, but by the sale under the statute plus the expiration of the period provided for redemption. There is no time provided in the statute within which a deed must be applied for and given. It has not been contended that if, after the sale and the expiration of the period of redemption, but before the delivery of the deed, the prior owner should execute a conveyance of the property, such conveyance would be of any force or effect. How can the fact that the purchaser has received a deed which evidences his title and has withheld it from record enlarge the right of the prior owner? It is, of course, true that if the prior owner had (no tax sale intervening) voluntarily conveyed, and a bona fide purchaser had intervened prior to record, the first conveyance would be void as against the bona fide purchaser. But this is because, as to the bona fide purchaser, the act of the owner in divesting himself of title is considered nugatory, and that the title resided in the prior owner at the time of the conveyance to the bona fide purchaser. Assuming that the deed of the tax collector be considered null and void, the proceedings antedating the delivery of the deed, to wit, the sale and the delivery of the tax certificate, are not affected. The right to convey the land does not revert to the prior owner. The tax collector might, I think, if the deed were lost, be obliged by mandamus to execute a new one. It has been so held in the case of a sheriff's deed. McMillan v. Edward, 75 N. C. 81.

In Glorieux v. Lighthipe, 88 N. J. Law, 199, 96 Atl. 94, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 484, the Court of Errors and Appeals, in considering the language of section 53, that provision of the act making record notice (2 Comp. Statutes, p. 1552), held that the words "subsequent purchasers" referred to subsequent purchasers of the same land. I think that the words in section 54, "subsequent purchasers," must be confined to "subsequent purchasers" of the same land and of the same grantor, and that the grantor must, at the time of the making of the deed to the subsequent purchaser, have the right to make such conveyance, assuming the prior unrecorded deed to be void. A view opposite to that expressed by me has apparently been taken by the Supreme Court of Georgia in Maddox v. Arthur, 122 Ga. 671, 50 S. E. 668. The court said:

"The purchaser at the tax sale, relatively to the rights of a subsequent purchaser at sheriff's sale, stands in no better position than if he were a purchaser from the landowner; and if he fails to file his deed for record until after one, without notice of his title, has purchased the property at a valid sheriff's sale, and duly recorded the sheriff's deed, he loses whatever title he may have acquired at the tax sale. For, as was said by Judge Lumpkin in Ellis v. Smith, supra [10 Ga. 253], in reference to a sheriff's sale: "The effect of a sale by the law in this respect is just the same as if made by the individual whose agent or trustee the officer becomes to make the transfer."

Under the statutes of Georgia, marshals' sales for taxes are held under general executions. Inasmuch as the matter is novel in this state (I cannot find any cases whatever bearing upon the subject), and as my conclusion is opposed to the text in 17 Cyc. title "Executions," page 347, and several adjudicated cases, it seems necessary to make a more extended inquiry as to whether it is consistent with the purposes and history of the recording acts than would otherwise seem proper.

The justification for the legislative fiat that deeds not recorded should be void as against bona fide subsequent purchasers for value is the assumption that if deeds are recorded careful purchasers will obtain notice by a search of the record. There is nothing in the Adjustment Act which requires that there should be inserted in the deed given by the tax collector the name of the prior owner. If it were not for the use in some counties of the Luck index system, a prospective purchaser, to obtain notice of tax collector's deeds, would be obliged to examine every tax collector's deed recorded, an intolerable burden. If record is to be of no substantial value, it is hard to imagine why it should be required, although it is quite apparent why it should be permitted for the purpose of perpetuating evidence and making a copy of the record evidential—this being the initial purpose of the registry acts.

It was not until 1820 (section 10 of the act of 1820; Revision of 1821, p. 747) that an alphabetical index was provided for. Nixon's Digest, title "Conveyance," p. 144, § 21. It was not until then that sheriff's deeds and deeds executed by other officers were referred to in any wise. That section provided that there should be indexed, in case the deed be made by a sheriff, the name of the sheriff and the name of the defendant or defendants mentioned in the execution; and if by executor or administrator, the name of such executor or administrator and the testator or intestate; and if by attorney or attorneys, the name of such attorney or attorneys and his or their constituents; and if by commissioners under a law of this state, or appointed by order of any of the courts of this state, the name of such commissioners and the name of the person whose estate has been conveyed. No provision has been made for an alphabetical index with respect to tax collectors' deeds.

It was not until 1864 (Laws 1864, p. 498) that provision was made requiring that sheriff's deeds should be executed in such manner as that they might be recorded. That section provided for the familiar affidavit as to the method of sale, and that upon the conveyance being approved by the court it might be recorded as if duly acknowledged, and further that such conveyance or the record thereof, or a certified copy of the record, should be evidence of a good and valid sale, and the conveyance of said land and real estate as if the same had been reported to and approved by the court in pursuance of whose decree, judgment, execution, or order the same was made.

Upon sale under execution (Paterson's Laws 1799, p. 371, § 12) the sheriff was directed to give a deed which should be "as good and sufficient a deed or conveyance for the lands, * * * as the person against whom the said writ or writs of execution were issued might or could have made for the same at or before the time of rendering judgment against him or her. * * *" So with respect to auditors' deeds. Paterson's Laws, p. 300, § 23. So with respect to executors' and administrators' deeds on sale of lands to pay debts. Paterson's Laws, p. 373, § 22. The law as it existed at the time of Nixon's Digest provided (page 854, § 11) that, upon the happening of certain contingencies the succeeding sheriff should "sign, seal and deliver to the said purchaser * * * a deed, * * * which deed * * * shall have the same force and effect as if the sheriff who made the sale had signed, sealed and delivered a deed of conveyance for the same in due form of law." There was no requirement of acknowledgment.

The title of the act of 1864 referring to sheriff's deeds is "An act for the better security of titles to land sold by sheriffs and other officers." It provides in its second section that the deed and the record thereof, or a certified copy of such record, shall be good and sufficient prima facie evidence of the truth of the recitals in the said deed or conveyance contained. It is significant that this is an independent act and was passed for the purpose of perpetuating evidence. There is no intimation that at that time it was considered that there was any requirement that sheriffs' deeds should be recorded.

Since it has been permissible to transmit title of real property by deed, there has always been recognized a distinction between the formalities which are necessary where the conveyance is made by the grantor voluntarily and where it is made by an officer of the law. See Kent's Comm. p. 446, lecture 57, and notes; Revised Edition by William M. Lacey, 1889, vol. 4, p. 472, notes.

The initial purpose of the recording statutes was to perpetuate documents and to make the records and copies thereof evidence. As early as the days of Queen Anne (chapter 19, St. 13 Anne; Nevill, p. 37) it was provided (section 7) that exemplification of deeds, etc., proved and certified in a certain manner, and any of the public books of records of the province, should be received in evidence. In 1713 or 1714 an act was passed, section 1 of which provided that all deeds, conveyances, and evidences of land should be acknowledged by the grantor, or proved before an officer designated. The act provided that the record should be evidence, but did not provide a penalty for nonrecording. Allinson's Laws, p. 33. This act was annulled in 1721. It was re-enacted in substantially the same form and again annulled in 1731. Allinson's Laws, p. 80. In 1743 (Allinson's Laws, p. 132), an act was passed permitting deeds acknowledged or proved in a certain manner to be recorded; the record was made evidence, but there was no provision with respect to a penalty for failure to record. This provision was first introduced in the law, so far as I can ascertain, by the act of 1799. Paterson's Laws, p. 399, § 8. It provided that:

"Every deed * * * shall be void and of no effect against a subsequent bona fide purchaser or mortgagee, for a valuable consideration, not having notice thereof, unless such deed * * * shall be acknowledged * * * and be lodged, within six calendar months, * * * to be recorded."

The act also provided that the record should be evidence. The section with respect to acknowledgment and record is permissive only. The time to record was cut down to fifteen days by the act of 1820 (Revision of 1821, p. 747, § 1). The Revision of 1848 made no changes bearing upon the situation. Nixon's Digest, title "Conveyance," p. 146, § 18. The Conveyance Act was revised in 1874. Revision, p. 89. By section 13 it was provided that no deed, unless acknowledged or proved according to law, should be recorded. Section 14 provided that any deed not acknowledged, proved, recorded, or lodged for record within 15 days after its execution should be void as against subsequent purchasers. Section 33 provided for an alphabetical index. Subsequently an act was passed omitting the provision for 15 days. In 1898 the act was again revised. Laws 1898, p. 670. Section 21 permitted the acknowledgment or proving and recording of all conveyances affecting lands. Section 53 provided for the effect of such record as notice. Section 54 provided for the effect of their nonrecord as against subsequent purchasers. Section 52 contained a provision that no deed or instrument, unless acknowledged or proved and certified in the manner thereinabove directed, should be recorded.

It will be at once observed that it might well be claimed that the effect of section 52 was to repeal by implication the provisions of the act of 1864 providing for the method of execution of sheriffs' deeds. This was remedied by an act of 1904 (Laws of 1904, p.

70). Section 52 was amended to except conveyances by a sheriff or other officer or auditors in attachment in pursuance of a decree, judgment, or execution, or order of a court which it was provided might be recorded as theretofore. Section 2 of the act of 1904 validated the record of conveyances made by sheriffs and other officers, if they had been executed as in the thirteenth section of the act relative to sales of land under public statute (Revision of 1874) provided for. The history of this legislation demonstrates that its original purpose was to perpetuate evidence. Hence acknowledgment or proof and record were made permissive. The second purpose which was sought to be achieved was the protection of bona fide purchasers for value without notice. Since Paterson's Laws the permissive and mandatory features of the act have existed side by side, but in construing the act as it now reads consideration must be given to its double purpose. It is inconceivable to me that from 1799 and up until 1821 it should have been considered that sheriffs' deeds and the like were within the purview of the statute. There was no provision requiring that such deeds should be acknowledged, so that they might be recorded, and to make their record efficacious it would, as I have before indicated, necessitate an examination by a prospective purchaser of every sheriff's deed.

Nor do I think the fact that the Legislature in 1820 provided for an alphabetical index and directed that, so far as sheriffs' deeds and those of certain enumerated officers were concerned, the names of the prior owners of the property should be indexed, enlarged the scope of the act. Sheriffs' deeds, if acknowledged, might, at the option of the holder, be recorded, so that title deeds might be perpetuated. There was still no mandate requiring the sheriff to acknowledge. In the act permitting a deed to be given by a succeeding sheriff, the words used are that he shall sign, seal, and deliver. Nor do I think that the act of 1864 (P. L. 1864, p. 496) providing for the approval of sheriffs' deeds, and the record thereof, enlarged the scope of the penalizing section of the recording act. Its purpose was merely to compel the sheriff to deliver a deed which might be recorded, so that the purchaser might perpetuate his evidence of title. Nor do I think that the change in the phraseology of the penalizing section, so that it now specifically refers to the instruments enumerated in section 21, has enlarged its scope so far as this particular phase of the subject is concerned.

The words used in Paterson's Laws could not be broader. They refer to every deed or conveyance of land, tenements, or hereditaments. If a sheriff's or tax collector's deed were not within the purview of the section prior to the change in phraseology, I do not think that they are now. I have already pointed out that, if it be held that tax collectors' deeds be within the purview of the deed it would be necessary for him, so far as any provision of the act is concerned, to examine every tax collector's deed that had ever been recorded in the county. It would also result in this: That although the purchaser is absolutely protected up to the time of obtaining his deed, yet the instant after he obtains it the prior owner may sell to a bona fide purchaser for value, and if the bona fide purchaser for value reaches the courthouse first his right takes precedence.

Some of the states by legislation specifically require the recording of tax collectors' and sheriffs' deeds, and generally the acts give a certain length of time within which the instruments may be recorded. Lindley v. Mays, 66 Iowa, 265, 23 N. W. 660; Littlefield v. Prince, 96 Me. 499, 52 Atl. 1010; Humphrey v. Yost, 10 Kan. App. 824, 62 Pac. 550; Sintes v. Barber, 78 Miss. 585, 29 South. 408; Scott v. Conrad, 24 Colo. App. 452, 135 Pac. 135. The court in Pollard v. Cocke, 19 Ala. 188, held that marshals' or sheriffs' deeds were within the recording act. The court said:

"But it is argued that there is no statute in this state requiring marshals' or sheriffs' deeds to be recorded. The statute is general, and we see no reason for exempting them from its operation. They certainly fall as much within the mischief intended to be remedied as other absolute deeds for lands sold at public auction. Under statutes of other states requiring registration of deeds generally, they have been held to be embraced. Massey v. Thompson, 2 Nott & McC. [S. C.] 105; Scribner's Lessee v. Lockwood, 9 Ohio, 184."

An examination of the opinion in Scribner's Lessee v. Lockwood discloses that it is not an authority for the position taken by the Alabama court. In the Ohio case it was held that where a person conveys land, which is afterwards taken in execution, sold, the sale confirmed, and deed ordered, before the first deed is recorded, the purchaser at the sheriff's sale is regarded a bona fide purchaser from the time of sale, and protected as such, though the first deed be recorded after the confirmation of sale, but before sheriff's deed is made. The court said:

"The plaintiff contends that, inasmuch as his deed was recorded before the execution and delivery of a deed by the sheriff, that the common principle of law, that notice received any time before the conveyance, as well as before the payment of the purchase money, has a direct application, and that its effect is to put aside the title of the defendant; and this would undoubtedly be true, as I before said, if the analogy between a sheriff's deed and a deed from a private individual was perfect throughout.

"It is a very common error, where there is a general resemblance between two things, so as to subject them, in some measure, to one common law, to suppose that this law is of universal applicability, and that it furnishes the governing rule where the resemblance fails as well as where it is preserved. The various steps of the process through which a judicial sale is perfected, are something very different from what takes place in a private sale. It is much more reasonable in the present instance to say that where a person has purchased at sheriff's deed for a deed, that these steps not only constitute so many acts of public notoriety, but that they also contribute so completely to identify the land and consummate the sale that he whose title is perfect up to this period shall not be disturbed in consequence of the registry of another deed, before his own is actually delivered; that he is in truth a purchaser without notice, and that the registry of the other deed before he receives his own conveyance, which would be a circumstance of the greatest importance, if both deeds were private conveyances, is in reality of no moment in his case."

In Fernyhough v. Rockwell, 31 S. D. 75, 139 N. W. 780, the court said:

"Section 2216, Pol. Code, throws additional light on this subject. It provides that, when a tax deed is issued, the certificate of sale must be canceled and filed away. It is our opinion, therefore, that, when the tax deed was issued, the tax sale became canceled. Until the sale, the treasurer's duplicate tax list imparted notice of the unpaid tax. After the tax sale, the treasurer's sale book, together with the annotation on the subsequent tax lists and tax receipts, imparted notice of the sale. When the tax deed, whether valid or void, was issued, the sale book no longer imparted notice of the sale, and there was no longer any duty on the treasurer's part to note such sale on subsequent tax lists or tax receipts. The holder of the tax deed then stood in the same position as the holder of any other kind of deed, viz. in order to have surely protected his rights, he should have recorded his deed."

There is no provision in our Adjustment Act as to filing away the tax certificate, etc., as in the South Dakota statute. If the tax books are marked "Paid," it is not necessarily when the deed is delivered. It may be any time after the purchase price of the land is paid. The records in the tax office can no more be considered as notice before the delivery of notice before, and I can conceive of no good reason why they should not be so considered after, delivery. The fact that in the instant case the books were not so kept as to impart actual notice cannot alter the general rule.

I have examined the cases cited as authority by the court in support of its conclusion, and find none that fully support it, except, perhaps, Maddox v. Arthur, 122 Ga. 671, 50 S. E. 668. I have examined likewise all the cases which are cited in Cyc. as authority for its general statement of the rule, and there are none which I am willing to follow, which sustain it in the broad terms in which it is stated. In two early cases, two courts of equal repute, apparently took divergent views. In Jackson ex dem. Merrit v. Terry, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 471, in 1816, the Supreme Court of New York decided, under an act providing that all deeds or conveyances of, or concerning, or whereby any of the said lands may be in any way affected in law or equity, shall be recorded, and that every deed, or conveyance, of such land, shall be adjudged fraudulent and void against any subsequent purchaser, for valuable consideration, unless the same be recorded before the recording of the deed or conveyance under which such subsequent purchaser shall claim that a sheriff's deed must be recorded. The court considered that the object of the statute was to enable purchasers to ascertain the validity of title, and to determine whether they could purchase with safety, and that the law referred them to the record for this purpose; that, if the sheriff's sale is to defeat the purchaser, he would in vain seek for the evidence of the title. The court said:

"Upon the whole, therefore, we think it will best comport with the reason and policy of the statute, as it certainly does with the letter, to extend it to sheriff's deeds as well as to others."

In Houghton v. Bartholomew, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 138, the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, in considering their statute of 1783, which provided that deeds not recorded should only avail, as between the grantor and his heirs, said:

"Of all cases arising under the registry law, that of a sheriff's deed, upon a sale of an equity of redemption, would seem to be the last which requires a rigid construction of the registry law. Ordinary deeds are, in a good degree, private conveyances, and the transactions may be entirely unknown beyond the grantor and grantee. A levy of execution on real estate by appraisal is comparatively a private transaction; no public notice being given, and the proceeding being such as may take place remote from the public eye. But not so in the case of an equity of redemption, on execution, by an officer. Such sale cannot take place unless there shall have been public notice, both by publishing in a newspaper and by posting up notices in public places; and the sale is at public auction. Such, indeed, were the circumstances of publicity attending such sales that it had come to be doubted whether any registry was necessary of the deed from the sheriff to the purchaser of the equity. It was this very doubt that furnished the leading object for this new enactment, contained in Rev. St. c. 73, § 33, requiring such deeds to be recorded in three months, and this with a view to the protection of a bona fide purchaser. It was therefore made the subject of a positive enactment."

The court cites with approval the rule laid down by the Supreme Court of New York in Jackson v. West, 10 Johns. 466, that:

"Courts are to construe the Registry Act, not so literally as to work injustice, but so liberally as to prevent the mischief and advance the remedy."

I think that the doubt expressed by the Massachusetts court indicates the true rule. In Goodman v. Sanger, 1879, 91 Pa. (10 Norris) 71, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania held that a deed made by a treasurer to commissioners of a county for lands sold for taxes is not void as against a subsequent purchaser from the former owner of the land. The court approved Seechrist v. Baskin, 7 Watts & S. (Pa.) 408, 42 Am. Dec. 251, in which case it had been held that sheriffs' deeds were not within the purview of the statute. The court said:

"Since the decision in Seechrist v. Baskin, the acts of 1846 (Pamphl. L. 124) and 1849 (Pamphl. L. 344) authorize deeds of sheriffs, treasurers, and county commissioners to be recorded in the office of the recorder of deeds in the county where the lands lie; and the records thereof, or duly certified copies, shall be evidence where the original deeds would be. These acts appear to be solely for preservation of the deeds and making exemplifications evidence; they dispense with no proofs previously necessary to support the deeds. Nor is it their purpose to make the respective records notice of a sheriff's sale, or of a sale for taxes."

The Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia, in Wildell Lumber Co. v. Turk et al., 75 W. Va. 26, 83 S. E. 83, held that their Recording Act applied to deeds made by court commissioners in the execution of decrees of sale of forfeited and delinquent lands; but it is significant that their Registry Act required every deed, without exception, to be proved, acknowledged, or certified according to law. Our Registry Acts do not, except in certain instances, require deeds to be acknowledged or proved, but merely permit them to be. It is significant that the two earlier acts which did not receive the assent of the crown (Allinson's Laws, 33, 80) required acknowledgment; whereas the act passed in 1743 (Allinson's Laws, 182), which received the royal assent, was in the permissive form.

I am convinced that it was not within the intent of the Legislature to vitiate unrecorded sheriffs' and tax collectors' deeds as against purchasers from former owners for value without notice; that until 1864 it was fully recognized that sheriffs' deeds need not be acknowledged or proved, so that they might be recorded. It is significant that there is no case in this state in which the question has arisen. It may be that this is so because sheriffs' deeds were so clearly within the wording of the statute that no one thought to raise the question; but it seems to me almost inconceivable that, if sheriffs' deeds were considered to be within the statute, a dispute should not have arisen during the long space of time that the Registry Acts have been in effect which would involve the rights of a holder of a sheriff's deed and a bona fide purchaser for value from a former owner.

It seems to me that, if the Legislature had intended that deeds of this nature should be within the purview of the statute, it would have, as most of the other states have, provided for a certain length of time in which such deeds might be recorded. In the General Tax Act of 1903 (P. L. p. 430, § 56) there is a distinct provision for the record of certificates of tax sales, etc. There is no such provision in the Tax Adjustment Act.

The logical reasoning which underlies my conclusion that a tax collector's deed is not within the purview of the fifty-fourth section of the statute, as I stated at the outset of this opinion, is that, even assuming it to be void, the prior owner still has no right to convey; his rights are cut off, not by the delivery of the deed, but by operation of law.

I will advise a decree in accordance with this opinion. Settle decree on three days' notice.

(99 N. J. Eq. 329)

DRIVER v. SMITH et al. (No. 45/259.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. Aug. 24, 1918.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. INJUNCTION ⇨21—DENIAL—OBSTRUCTION OF WAR WORK.

In an action strictly inter partes between individual parties the court may not deny to a party legal or equitable relief to which he is clearly entitled, merely because the effect of the granting of such relief will be to embarrass the party against whom the relief is granted in the performance of war work.

2. INJUNCTION ⇨21—DENIAL—PUBLIC POLICY.

In such an action relief cannot be denied upon contracts because the effect of the enforcement of the contracts will be to embarrass the government in war activities, unless the effect is such as renders the enforcement of the contracts improper as opposed to a well-defined rule of public policy.

3. INJUNCTION ⇨21—NEGATIVE COVENANTS—ENFORCEMENT.

Unless a contractor for the government can point to a special privilege which has been created by law, or executive or governmental regulations having the force of law, he stands before the court in precisely the same situation as any other person.

4. INJUNCTION ⇨127—ENFORCEMENT OF DECREE—CONSIDERATIONS.

The court may not, in determining what the effect of the enforcement of its decree will be, consider letters written by officers of the army.

5. INJUNCTION ⇨21—GROUND FOR DENIAL—INJUSTICE.

In an action brought to enforce negative covenants, under the provisions of which parties agree to work for none other than complainant, the court will consider all of the equities, will weigh the conveniences, and will withhold its injunction if to grant it would do more injustice than justice.

6. INJUNCTION ⇨21—ENFORCEMENT OF NEGATIVE COVENANTS—CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT—EFFECT UPON EMPLOYER'S BUSINESS.

In such an action the effect upon the business of an employer for whom the employes worked prior to the making of the contracts, and who would be entitled to a continuance of the services were it not for the making of the contracts, the employes being enticed away by the complainant as a part of a scheme to injure the prior employer's business, may be considered, notwithstanding that the complainant intended also to advantage himself as well as injure the prior employer.

7. INJUNCTION ⇨63—CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT.

Employers of labor at will have a property right in the services of their employes, and are entitled to protection against interference with no sufficient justification.

8. CONTRACTS ⇨108(1)—CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT—PUBLIC POLICY—SETTLEMENT OF LABOR DISPUTES.

At the time the contracts in suit were entered into, June 1, 1918, there was a well-defined public policy that labor engaged in war industries should remain static, and that disputes with respect to wages and conditions should be settled through government agencies.

9. CONTRACTS ⇨133—PUBLIC POLICY—INTERFERENCE WITH WAR WORK—VALIDITY.

Contracts obtained as part of a scheme which, if successful, would have the effect of disrupting the organization of a plant engaged in the manufacture of war materials essential to the prosecution of the war, are voidable as long as they remain executory, and this is so whether the parties intended to advantage themselves and had in mind no thought of injury to the government or not.

10. CONTRACTS ⇨133—CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT.

Where such contracts are entered into between a prospective employer and employes, and the employes repudiate after realizing the effect of the performance of the contracts, they are entitled to a cancellation of the contracts.

11. CONTRACTS ⇨138(1)—INVALIDITY—PUBLIC POLICY.

In such cases the rule that the court will leave the parties to contracts void as against public policy where it finds them has no application.

12. INJUNCTION ⇨128—PROSECUTION OF REMEDIES—GROUNDS.

The court will not enjoin a party from proceeding with remedies apparently open to him, upon the ground that the party is proceeding merely vexatiously, except in a very clear case.

13. INJUNCTION ⇨128—PROTEST AGAINST ESTABLISHMENT OF BUSINESS—EVIDENCE.

Evidence considered, and held that the Driver-Harris Company, in protesting to the Secretary of State against the issuance of a charter to the Wilbur B. Driver Company, and to the War Industries Board, to the Capital Issues Committee, to the Priority Commissioner, and to various other governmental agencies against the business contemplated to be established by Wilbur B. Driver, did not proceed merely vexatiously, and prosecution of these protests will not be enjoined, the company having reasonable ground for its actions.

*(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)14. CONTRACTS ⇨108(1)—"PUBLIC POLICY."

"Public policy" is that principle of law holding that no person can lawfully do that which has a tendency to injure the public, or which is against the public good, and is sometimes designated as the policy of the law, or public policy in relation to the administration of the law.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Public Policy.]

Bills by Wilbur B. Driver against Fred Smith, James Travers, and Howard Saylor to enforce negative covenants in contracts of employment, with answer and counterclaim by the individual defendants asking that the contracts be declared void, and with counterclaim by defendant the Driver-Harris Company seeking to enjoin complainant and others from enticing its employes or from interfering with or demoralizing its organization, with answer and cross-bill by complainant and such others against defendant the Driver-Harris Company, seeking to enjoin that company from interfering with complainant and others in the conduct of their business, and answer by the Driver-Harris Company. Causes and issues consolidated for hearing, and decree against complainant on his original bills, cancelling the contracts of the individual defendants, denying the application of defendant the Driver-Harris Company for an injunction, and denying injunction against the Driver-Harris Company from interfering with the business of complainant and others in the manner set forth in their cross-bill.

Arthur T. Vanderbilt and Ralph Lum, both of Newark, for complainant. Arthur F. Egner, William P. Martin, and Robert H. McCarter, all of Newark, for defendants.

LANE, V. C. This is a final hearing. Three bills were filed by complainant against defendants Fred Smith, James Travers, and Howard Saylor to enforce negative covenants contained in contracts entered into between complainant and said defendants on June 1, 1918, under the provisions of which said defendants agreed to enter the service of complainant for a period of two years from July 1, 1918, and agreed that they should not, either directly or indirectly, be connected or concerned in any other business or person whatsoever during the said two years of service.

To the bills said defendants answered, admitting the making of the contracts, and alleging that prior to the making thereof they had for a considerable space of time been employes of the Driver-Harris Company, of which until the 28th day of May, 1918, complainant, Wilbur B. Driver, was a director; that prior to the signing of the contracts complainant had, while still a director of that company, by coercion, persuasion, and offers of greater returns, induced defendants to sign contracts similar to those in suit; that the obtaining of the contracts was a part of a scheme by which complainant sought to entice away from the Driver-Harris Company employes essential to its organization, so that its business might be disrupted; that the Driver-Harris Company was engaged in working on contracts for the government of the United States for war material absolutely essential to the making of gas-masks, and which material could not be manufactured at any other place; that defendants were engaged in this work, and that, were they to leave it, the organization of the Driver-Harris Company would be demoralized and production impeded. Although not so alleged in terms, the effect of the answer is that the contracts and the scheme of complainant were in direct violation of a rule of public policy of the United States. It is alleged that immediately after the signing of the contracts, and upon realizing that they were part of a scheme to injure the Driver-Harris Company and were contrary to a rule of public policy, defendants repudiated. By counterclaims they ask that the contracts be declared null and void.

The Driver-Harris Company was admitted as a party defendant, and filed a counterclaim, in which it set up the acts of complainant, Driver, and alleged that he had, while its officer and director, conceived the idea of establishing a rival business, after having a quarrel with the management, and forthwith maliciously proceeded to set out to injure the company by enticing away members of its organization with the purpose of demoralizing its force, and alleged as overt acts the making of the contracts with the individual defendants, and the attempts of complainant to entice others of its important employes. It prays for an injunction restraining complainant from further undertaking to entice its employes, servants, agents, or officers, and from approaching them with a view of offering them higher wages, and from attempting by any other means to injure said defendant in the prosecution of its important government work, or from interfering with or demoralizing its organization.

To this counterclaim complainant answered, and also filed a counterclaim against defendant Driver-Harris Company, alleging that, prior to the making of the contracts with the employes of the Driver-Harris Company, he had informed the directors and officers that he intended to sever relations with it; that on May 14, 1918, he had formally resigned as vice president and general manager, and thereafter did no act on behalf of the company; that on May 25th he resigned as director, which resignation was accepted on May 28th; that he intended to go into the same business for himself; that he acquired the stock of the Murray Wire Company, which was then engaged in the wire-drawing business; that he determined to organize a corporation to take over the assets of the Murray Wire Company under the name of the Wilbur B. Driver Company; that he had approached employes of the Driver-Harris Company with offers of employment, but without malicious intent; that he and the individual defendants had entered into the contracts referred to in the bill of complaint; that the Driver-Harris Company, in order to annoy and impede him, had protested to the Secretary of State against the granting of a charter to the Wilbur B. Driver Company, to the War Industries Board, the Capital Issues Committee, the Priority Commissioner, and various other governmental agencies, against the establishment of the business contemplated to be established by complainant; that in these protests certain false representations were made; that the Driver-Harris Company, by threats and false representations, induced the individual defendants to break their contracts; that it made false representations to customers and prospective customers of complainant and the Murray Wire Company, with the result that the business of complainant had been seriously affected, and that the acts of the Driver-Harris Company tend to stifle competition. He denies any intent maliciously to injure the Driver-Harris Company, or that the effects of his efforts would be to demoralize its force, or to seriously interfere with the production of war materials. He prays for an injunction restraining the company from interfering with and obstructing the complainant and the Wilbur B. Driver Company and the Mur-to establish the same, or directly or indirectly attempting to embarrass them, or either of them, in their establishment of their business or the conduct of the same.

This cross-bill was filed by Wilbur B. Driver, Murray Wire Company, and Wilbur B. Driver Company, the latter two brought in as parties by the counterclaim of defendant Driver-Harris Company. To this counterclaim defendant Driver-Harris Company answered. The determination of the respective litigations depending upon the same facts, the causes and issues were consolidated for hearing.

There are four distinct issues to be determined: First, whether a court of equity will enforce the negative covenants contained in the contracts; second, whether the contracts should be canceled, or whether complainant should be permitted to seek such remedy as he may have at law; third, whether complainant should be enjoined from enticing employees of the defendant Driver-Harris Company; fourth, whether the defendant Driver-Harris Company should be enjoined from interfering with the business of the complainant and the Murray Wire Company and the Wilbur B. Driver Company in the manner set forth in the counter complaint.

[1-3] A preliminary objection was made to the granting of any relief to complainant on his original bills by this court for the reasons that, should relief as complainant desired be granted, it would result in detriment to the government in the progress of the war. As partial proof of this fact there was presented a letter addressed to the court under date of July 15th, written by William L. Sibert, a major general of the United States army, and director of the chemical and warfare service, in which he states that he would regard any action of the Court of Chancery which would result in preventing Smith working for the Driver-Harris Company as highly detrimental to the interests of the government at this time. There was also presented a letter addressed to the court, written by T. W. Sill, a captain of the sanitary corps, and commanding officer of the Astoria detachment of the gas defense service, under date of July 16, 1918, in which he, referring to Smith, states that he has been informed that Smith's services were indispensable in carrying out the completion of the orders the government had with the Driver-Harris Company, and that it is therefore essential to them from a patriotic standpoint as well as necessity that his services, utilized in the production of this equipment, be not interfered with; that it is also his understanding that the necessary production could not be secured with the necessary promptness without utilizing the present facilities of the Driver-Harris Company's equipment and organization. There was legal evidence before the court, including that of a lieutenant in charge of the Driver-Harris pel the individual defendants to cease interfering for the Driver-Harris Company to a very appreciable extent cripple its and would result in delay of production which would be detrimental to the interests of the government. The Driver-Harris Company intimates that, this being so, the will, as matter of course, withhold its This is a final hearing in an action inter partes. The government has not to intervene. I can readily conceive preliminary applications, where the interests of the parties will not be substantially affected, or where the matters are such as to be left to the pure discretion, that the action of the court may be influenced by the effect of its action on governmental activities, and in such cases it may be that the court will take no action on matters affecting the public welfare, all matters communicated to it merely in writing. This is the statement of Judge Hough in Murray Wire Co. v. Simon (D. C. Fed. 906). What Judge Hough said on this branch of the case is purely obiter, and the court proceeded to consider the merits, and the merits dismissed the bill. The gist of the decision is summed up in his words on page 907.

"Simon did agree with the naval authorities to contribute toward what would ordinarily be considered as an infringement, but the United States could not infringe by using what Simon made because it was a licensee. Therefore Simon could not be a contributory infringer by assisting in doing a lawful thing. * * * On this view of the facts the conclusion urged by defendant is correct."

His determination was affirmed in the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit (231 Fed. 1021, 145 C. C. A. 656), but there was a strong dissent by Ward, Circuit Judge. He concludes his opinion:

"Courts, out of regard for public policy, no doubt refuse to interfere in proper cases with government activities by enjoining independent contractors as a matter of discretion just as the District Judge has done, but this bill should not be dismissed even if the injunction be denied."

In a case in this court Vice Chancellor Backes is reported in the Law Journal (11 J. L. J. p. 163) to have said that this court would not grant a decree which would have the effect of interfering with governmental activities in time of war. The case before the Vice Chancellor, as gathered from the report, involved the right of the board of health of this state to enjoin the pollution of a stream as a nuisance, and it was brought to the attention of the court that if the injunction went there would be injury to the government in that the making of certain chemicals necessary for war purposes would be interfered with. It is significant that the action was not one between individual parties, but one in which on one side was an individual and on the other side a governmental department of this state. No supposition, can be found either in the opinion

Judge Hough or the reported statement of Vice Chancellor Backes that for the proposition in an action strictly between individuals the court will or can deny to a party legal or equitable relief to which he is clearly entitled, merely because the effect of the granting of such relief will be to embarrass the party against whom the relief is granted in the performance of war work. So long as the courts are open the rights of parties must be determined by the existing law. It would be an intolerable situation if each court before whom the rights of individuals were litigated were permitted to determine whether relief should be granted or withheld upon its opinion as to whether the granting or withholding relief would aid or injure the government in its war activities, and it would be still more intolerable were the courts permitted to base their opinion upon written statements of officers of the army, no matter how high their rank. The general government does not have to depend upon the favor of courts. Its power is limited only by such constitutional interdictions as remain in force during war. If the effect of a decree of the court, rendered under existing law, be to embarrass the government, the fault lies either with the Constitution or the legislative branch of the government for failure to confer sufficient power upon its executive or upon the executive for failure to have exercised power conferred. So far as the present case is concerned there is no lack of power to remedy any harm which may be occasioned to the government by the enforcement of a decree of this court if it should be granted. Under existing law it has full and complete authority to take over and operate through its own agents any essential war industry. The time has not yet arrived where courts will permit the appropriation of the property of one by another upon the plea that the other needs the property for war purposes. I cannot think it would be seriously argued that a court to whom application was made for process of attachment would be justified in withholding a writ upon the plea that the service of the writ might interfere with the property being sent abroad, and thus affect the government, nor can I think it can be seriously argued that a writ of ne exeat could properly be denied because the individual affected was engaged in important government work which required his absence from the state. In the one case the goods might be bonded and in the other the individual might be sworn into the service of the United States. Contractors with the government are entitled only to such privileges and preferences as are granted to them by the law as it exists. Unless a contractor with the government can point to a special privilege which has been created by law, or by executive or governmental regulations having the force of law, he stands before the court in precisely the same situation as any other person.

The language of Lord Cranworth in Broadbent v. Imperial Gas Co., 7 D. El. G., M. & G. 436, quoted by Chief Justice Beasley in Higgins v. Flemington Water Co., 36 N. J. Eq. 538, and by Vice Chancellor Backes in Rowland v. New York Stable Manure Co. (N. J. Ch.) 101 Atl. 521, at page 524, as follows:

"If it should turn out that this company had no right so to manufacture gas as to damage plaintiff's market garden, I have come to the conclusion that I cannot enter into any question of how far it might be convenient for the public that the gas manufacture should go on. * * * But, unless the company had such a right, I think the present is not a case in which this court can go into the question of convenience or inconvenience, and say, where a party is substantially damaged, that he is only to be compensated by bringing an action toties quoties. That would be a disgraceful state of the law, and I quite agree with the Vice Chancellor in holding that in such a case this court must issue an injunction, whatever may be the consequences in regard to the lighting of the parishes and districts which this company supplies with gas."

—is as applicable in time of war as in time of peace. Unless the contracts, by reason of the effect of their enforcement, are contrary to a well-established public policy, the court must grant the legal or equitable relief to which the parties may be entitled.

[4] I therefore disregard in the determination of this case the letters which have been addressed to the court by Captain Sill and Major General Sibert, and will proceed to determine the merits of the controversy unaffected by what the effect of the decree will be if granted, except in so far as that effect may be considered in determining what are the actual legal and equitable rules which govern the case.

The facts as I find them are as follows:

Frank L. Driver is the president of the Driver-Harris Company. His brother, Wilbur B. Driver, had been associated with him in business prior to 1905 or 1906. There then was a quarrel, and Wilbur B. Driver left the company. There was litigation between the parties. Driver v. Driver-Harris Co., 70 N. J. Eq. 34, 62 Atl. 461. Wilbur B. Driver returned to the company in 1914, and in May, 1918, was the vice president and manager in charge of the production department. Prior to May 25th there was a disagreement between the brothers, with the result that on May 14th Wilbur B. Driver resigned as vice president and manager, and there was elected to succeed him Frank L. Driver, Jr., a son of Frank L. Driver. On May 25th Wilbur B. Driver sent in his resignation as director, which was accepted by the board on May 28th. At the time he left he was extremely irritated at the situation, and had conceived the idea of establishing a rival business. In order to accomplish this object, and to do as much damage as he could to the Driver-Harris Company, he intended to get as many as he could of the employees essential for the conduct of the business of the Driver-Harris Company away from it. That concern was engaged in manufacturing material under contracts with the United States government which was essential to the conduct of the war. The material goes into the making or production of gas-masks, and the plant is the only one from which it can be obtained in sufficient quantity.

Wilbur B. Driver was perfectly familiar with the organization of the Driver-Harris Company, and knew exactly what effect the removal of certain of its employes would have upon that organization. He deliberately approached, with offers of higher wages and other inducements, those employes whose removal would do the greatest injury to the company. He went so far as to endeavor to get Frank L. Driver, Jr., who had secured deferred classification as a necessary assistant or associate manager of an industrial enterprise, upon affidavits signed by Wilbur B. Driver. In the affidavits Driver swore that there were no other employes in the plant in the same position as Frank L. Driver, Jr., and none qualified to perform the same duties; that Frank L. Driver, Jr., could not be replaced by any other person; that it would require two or three years of actual experience to become familiar with the work of the industry and special products; that a discontinuance of, or even a serious interruption in, the industrial enterprise in which Frank L. Driver, Jr., was engaged would result in substantial and material loss to the adequate and effective maintenance of the military establishment and the maintenance of the national interests during the emergency.

As indicating clearly that the purpose of Wilbur B. Driver was not only to benefit himself, but to injure the Driver-Harris Company, his actions with respect to the private secretary of Frank L. Driver, Mrs. Mildred Clark, are significant. Mrs. Clark's husband was a bookkeeper. Mrs. Clark for some time had been the private and confidential secretary to Frank L. Driver. She not only attended to his business in connection with the company, but managed his private affairs, and was to him all that the term "confidential secretary" implies. Some time in the early spring of 1918 she had mentioned her husband to Wilbur B. Driver, and had stated that if he could do anything for her husband she would be gratified. Immediately upon Driver's conceiving the idea of establishing a rival concern he approached Mrs. Clark, going to her home, and offering her husband a position as bookkeeper, bringing to Mrs. Clark's mind the fact that, if her husband accepted the position as bookkeeper, she could no longer work for the Driver-Harris Company. The circumstances under which this offer was made lead me to conclude that it was not for the advantage of Wilbur B. Driver, but for the purpose of depriving Frank L. Driver, in a spirit of petty revenge, of the services of his confidential secretary.

Of the many employes approached by Driver he succeeded, while still a director of the company, in getting contracts from three, Smith, Travers, and Saylor. These contracts provided that the three should work for Wilbur B. Driver for a period of two years, to commence at once. Subsequently, and on June 1st, there were executed other contracts similar in form, except that the period of employment was to commence July 1st. I do not believe that the reason for the execution of the new contracts was as stated by Wilbur B. Driver, that it was desired that there should be a change in the date of the commencement of the employment. I think they were executed because of a feeling on the part of Wilbur B. Driver that the first contracts, executed at a time when he was still a director of the Driver-Harris Company, were invalid.

At the time of the execution of the contracts Wilbur B. Driver had no plant in which the services of the three employes could be utilized. He acquired control of the Murray Wire Company, and caused to be incorporated on June 25, 1918, the "Wilbur B. Driver Company." The contracts for employment provide that they may be assigned by Driver to a corporation to be formed to carry on the wire and foundry business. The Murray Wire Company, while a going concern, operates in a very small way.

The three employes, while essential to the organization of the Driver-Harris Company, are not at the present time essential to any work that Wilbur B. Driver is performing. His statement that he desires the services of Smith, in order that Smith might assist in the location of a plant, I do not believe. His purpose in insisting upon the withdrawal of the three employes from the Driver-Harris Company plant at this time I think is not that he may be substantially advantaged, but that the Driver-Harris Company may be substantially harmed. The three employes did not agree to go with Driver until after considerable persuasion. There were several meetings between Driver, the employes, and others whom Driver had approached. On May 24th, after Smith had agreed to go with Driver, he wrote Driver a letter in which he said:

"I have been thinking over very carefully the proposition which you mentioned to me, and it seems to me that I was a little hasty in stating that I would work with you as foreman of the foundry which you intend building. I have tried to look at it from all sides, and to consider my own interests and those of the Driver-Harris Company, for whom I am now working. As you, of course, know the company has a great deal of government work on hand, and it would not seem right to leave the company at this time, as the government is depending on every one of the men here to get the work out as fast as possible. In view of the above it will be impossible for me to accept the position which you offer at the present time."

Notwithstanding the receipt of this letter, Driver again approached Smith, and succeeded in finally getting him to sign the contract upon which his suit against Smith is grounded.

Subsequent to the execution of the contracts, and upon it being brought more forcibly to the attention of the employees what the effect of their withdrawal from the plant of the Driver-Harris Company would be, and upon the Driver-Harris Company offering them higher wages, all three repudiated the agreements and declined to serve thereunder.

Driver has not the capital to establish the business, or, if he has it, he does not desire to use it, for he is at the present time seeking capital from outside sources. He has not as yet secured permission from the Capital Issues Committee to issue securities. If he had the capital, and immediately commenced operations, it would be several months before the services of the three employees would be particularly advantageous to him.

The contracts of employment contain negative covenants, providing that the employees "shall not, either directly or indirectly, be connected with or concerned in any other business or person whatsoever during the said term of two years," and it is to enforce these negative covenants that Wilbur B. Driver's suits are brought.

First. Will a court of equity enforce the negative covenants?

[6] That the court will, under certain circumstances, enforce negative covenants of this nature is settled. Myers v. Steel Machine Co., 67 N. J. Eq. 300, at page 314, 57 Atl. 1080; Taylor Iron & Steel Co. v. Nichols, 73 N. J. Eq. 684, at page 691, 69 Atl. 186; Sternberg v. O'Brien, 48 N. J. Eq. 370, 22 Atl. 848. In most of the cases which have been cited in which negative covenants have been enforced it will be found that failure to enforce them would cause loss or damage to complainant other than that occasioned by a mere deprivation of the services of the employees; for instance, cases in which employees under contract to serve for a certain length of time have obtained trade secrets, to permit a disclosure of which to rivals would cause injury to the employer. In the case sub judice there is no such element present. The sole purpose of the suit is to compel the employees to work for the complainant by preventing them from working for any one else. The suit, therefore, while not so in form, is actually one for specific performance. Taylor Iron & Steel Co. v. Nichols, 73 N. J. Eq. at page 691, 69 Atl. 186, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 933, 133 Am. St. Rep. 753.

In Brown v. Brown, 33 N. J. Eq. 650, at page 655, the Court of Errors and Appeals said:

"Where jurisdiction exists (to enforce specific performance) the remedy is not of right; the court holds it in judicial discretion, controlled by principles of equity and justice. The question is not what the court must do, but what it may do under the circumstances." Radcliff v. Warrington, 12 Ves. 332."

Again, the same court in Blake v. Flatley, 44 N. J. Eq. 228, at page 231, 14 Atl. 128, at page 129 (6 Am. St. Rep. 886), said:

"But it is also held that courts of equity will not interfere to decree a specific performance except in cases where it would be strictly equitable to make such a decree. Whether, therefore, the contract shall be enforced specifically, must rest in the sound and reasonable discretion of the court, depending on the equity of the particular case and the nature of the objections to it. It must determine what are the objectionable circumstances which will control its jurisdiction in such cases, within the established rules of equity, though none of these rules are of absolute obligation and authority in all cases."

In Page v. Martin, 46 N. J. Eq. 585, at page 589, 20 Atl. 46 at page 47, Justice Garrison, speaking for the same court, said:

"The attitude of courts of equity upon applications of this character (specific performance) may be summarized in two propositions: First, that the relief invoked is not a matter ex debito justitiae, but rests in the sound discretion of the court; and, second, that where a contract is certain in all its parts, and for a fair consideration, and where the party seeking its enforcement is not himself in default, it is as much a matter of course for courts of equity to decree the performance of the contract as it is for courts of law to give damages for the breach of it. That relief rests not upon what the court must do, but, rather, upon what, in view of all the circumstances, it ought to do, is a distinction which is of little or no practical moment. In every case of this character the court is chiefly concerned with the equities of the parties before it."

Subsequent to this decision this language was reiterated by the same court, again speaking through Mr. Justice Garrison in Murray v. Skirm, 73 N. J. Eq. at page 378, 69 Atl. 496, 17 Ann. Cas. 963. It is significant, however, that the same court in Brisbane v. Sullivan, 86 N. J. Eq. 411, at page 413, 99 Atl. 197, at page 198, cited the quotation as follows:

"Mr. Justice Garrison, speaking for this court in Page v. Martin, 46 N. J. Eq. 585 [20 Atl. 46], said: 'That relief rests not upon what the court must do, but rather what, in view of all the circumstances, it ought to do.' * * * In every case of this character the court is chiefly concerned with the equities of the parties before it."

Subsequent to the decision of the Court of Errors and Appeals in Page v. Martin, Vice Chancellor Van Fleet, in Ten Eyck v. Manning, 52 N. J. Eq. 47, at page 49, 27 Atl. at page 900, said:

"The remedy by specific performance is not a matter of strict right, but of sound judicial discretion, and will be granted or denied as the justice and right of the particular case shall seem to the court, on full consideration of the rights and equities of the parties, to require."

The Court of Errors and Appeals in Pyatt v. Lyons, 51 N. J. Eq. 308, at page 314, 27 Atl. 934, at page 937, said:

"The relief invoked (specific performance) is not a matter ex debito justitiae; the bill for specific performance is addressed to the extraordinary jurisdiction of a court of equity to be exercised according to its discretion. * * *"

I think probably the clearest and most succinct statement of the rule is that contained in Blake v. Flatley, 44 N. J. Eq. at page 231, 14 Atl. at page 129 (6 Am. St. Rep. 886), as follows:

"But it is also held that courts of equity will not interfere to decree a specific performance except in cases, where it would be strictly equitable to make such a decree."

Mr. Justice Garrison, when he used the term, "a matter of course," in Page v. Martin, supra, could not have meant to overturn the rule that a court of equity will never make a decree against conscience or equity.

If after considering all the circumstances proper to be considered, and it then appears to this court that all the equities require that there should be a decree of specific performance, of course, as a matter of course, a decree goes. I do not think that Page v. Martin in any wise limits the effect of the prior decisions on the right of the court to look into all the surrounding circumstances.

In passing on this branch of the case I might say that I am in hearty accord with the language of Vice Chancellor Pitney in Feigenspan v. Nizolek, 71 N. J. Eq. 382, at page 394, 65 Atl. 703, at page 707, as follows:

"The practice of enforcing negative covenants by this court is well established, and is a part of the growth of equity jurisprudence to meet and keep up with the growth and development of business methods. The policy of the law is that business men should keep their contracts, and not turn the contract over to the uncertain remedy of an action at law for damages for nonperformance. It is, in my judgment, one of the most important functions of courts of equity to prevent injuries which result in damages, in all instances where it is practicable to do so, and the tendency is toward extending the protecting power of the court to cases not formerly thought to be sufficient to invoke its action."

A like view, I think, was expressed by Mr. Justice Pitney for the Supreme Court of the United States in Central Trust Co. v. Chicago Auditorium Ass'n, 240 U. S. 581, at page 591, 36 Sup. Ct. 412, 60 L. Ed. 811, L. R. A. 1917B, 580, considered by me in Allen v. Distilling Co. of America, 87 N. J. Eq. 531, at page 543, 100 Atl. 620.

Vice Chancellor Van Fleet, in Sternberg v. O'Brien, 48 N. J. Eq. 370, at page 375, 22 Atl. 348, at page 350, in dealing with a case involving the enforcement of a negative covenant against working for another than complainant, said:

"A court of equity, in exercising its prohibitory power, must always proceed with the utmost caution, and see to it that its power is not so exercised as to do more harm than good. The power exists to prevent irreparable wrong, and should not, therefore, be used, in any case, when its use will produce the very result it was designed to prevent. The rule is fundamental that an injunction should never be granted when it will operate oppressively or contrary to the real justice of the case, or where it is not the fit and appropriate method of redress under all the circumstances of the case, or when the benefit it will do the complainant is slight in comparison with the injury it will do the defendant. The great office of the writ is to protect and preserve, not to destroy. * * * When, therefore, a court is asked either to deprive a person of this right (the right to labor) or to abridge it, it is its duty, before it acts, to consider with the utmost care whether, if it does what it is asked to do, it will not, on a careful comparison of the consequences, do more injustice than justice."

Sternberg v. O'Brien has been cited with approval by the Court of Errors and Appeals in Trenton Potteries Co. v. Oliphant, 58 N. J. Eq. 507, 43 Atl. 723, 46 L. R. A. 255, 78 Am. St. Rep. 612, and in Taylor Iron & Steel Co. v. Nichols, 73 N. J. Eq. 684, at page 687, 69 Atl. 186, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 933, 133 Am. St. Rep. 753. The language which I have quoted from it was quoted by Vice Chancellor Leaming, in the case of Marvel v. Jonah, 81 N. J. Eq. 369, at page 377, 86 Atl. 968. While this case was reversed by the Court of Errors and Appeals in Marvel v. Jonah, 83 N. J. Eq. 295, 90 Atl. 1004, L. R. A. 1915B, 206, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 185, the language quoted of Vice Chancellor Van Fleet was not criticized. The appellate court found that the equities of the case required the enforcement of the negative covenants then under consideration. I am familiar with what Vice Chancellor Pitney said in Hennessy v. Carmony, 50 N. J. Eq. 616, 25 Atl. 374, reiterated by him in Law v. Smith, 68 N. J. Eq. 81, 90, 59 Atl. 327, and referred to by Vice Chancellor Backes in Rowland v. the New York Stable Manure Co. (N. J. Ch.) 101 Atl. 521. While the law may be that in the class of cases dealt with in these cases the court cannot, on final hearing, weigh the conveniences, yet I think it settled that in the class of cases with which I am now dealing the court may consider the consequences, and whether or not, on a careful comparison of the consequences, its decree may not do more injustice than justice. In the class of cases referred to by Vice Chancellor Pitney the ground upon which the English courts refuse to weigh consequences is that, until Parliament acts, private property in one cannot be taken for public use or the private use of another, and the ground upon which the courts in this state refuse is that the Constitution forbids the taking of private property for public use without compensation, and, in any event, the taking of the private property of one for the private uses of another. But at the time the Constitution was adopted the rules governing a court of equity in specific performance cases were well settled.

[6] In considering the consequences the interests of the Driver-Harris Company may be taken into account. The three individual defendants were, at the time their contracts were made with Wilbur B. Driver, employees of the Driver-Harris Company, and that company was entitled, as against others, to their continued employment and good will. That the employment was at will does not alter the situation. Frank & Dugan v. Her- old, 68 N. J. Eq. 443, at page 451, 52 Atl. 152; Noice v. Brown, 39 N. J. Law, 569; Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. v. Mitchell, 245 U. S. 229, 38 Sup. Ct. 65, 62 L. Ed. 260, L. R. A. 1918C, 497, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 461; Quinn v. Leatham, Ap. Cases 1901, p. 495; Brennan v. United Hatters, 73 N. J. Law, 729, 65 Atl. 165, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 254, 118 Am. St. Rep. 727, 9 Ann. Cas. 698; Jonas Glass Co. v. Glass Bottle Blowers' Association, 77 N. J. Eq. 219, 79 Atl. 262, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 445.

The effect of granting the relief asked for by complainant will be to deprive the Driver-Harris Company of the services of its employes. While it has been held that the effect of injunctive relief upon others than the parties generally cannot be considered (Rowland v. New York Stable Manure Co. [N. J. Ch.] 101 Atl. 521, at page 524), yet it seems to me that the rule does not apply in cases of the nature with which I am dealing, where the effect of the injunction will be to destroy a property right.

As stated above, the larger part of the output of the Driver-Harris Company is war material which can be produced at no other plant. The three employes are essential to the organization. To deprive the Driver-Harris Company of the services of the employes at this time would result in great loss and damage to it. It might result in the taking over of the plant by the government. If the testimony before me is to be believed, in no other way could the government adequately protect itself. The scheme which resulted in the making of the contracts had its genesis at a time when Wilbur B. Driver was a director of the Driver-Harris Company and under a duty to it. The employes signed the contracts only after persistent persuasion. The public interests require that they should continue employment with the Driver-Harris Company.

Vice Chancellor Van Fleet in Sternberg v. O'Brien, 48 N. J. Eq. 372, at page 372, 22 Atl. 348, at page 349, quoted with approval Chief Justice Best in Homer v. Ashford, 3 Bing. 322-326, as follows:

"The law * * * 'will not permit any one to restrain a person from doing what the public welfare and his own interests require that he should do.'"

Assuming now that the complainant has shown that the services of the employes are of so special, unique, or extraordinary character as that they will be of great advantage to complainant, this court is without power to compel the employes to render to the complainant those special, unique, or extraordinary services. By restraining the individual defendants from laboring for the Driver-Harris Company, it is hoped by the complainant that they will be compelled to work for him, but there is no certainty of this.

I am not, however, convinced that the services of the employes are of such a special, unique, or extraordinary character, considering the situation of the complainant, as that an injunction should issue. It is true that the services are essential to the conduct of the business of the Driver-Harris Company, but it does not necessarily follow that they are essential to the conduct of the business of complainant. Complainant has not yet established such a business as that the services of the individual defendants are required. I do not believe that the services are required for the establishment of the business contemplated to be established. It may be many months before complainant is in a position where the special, unique, or extraordinary services will be of benefit to him. If this court should at this time grant an injunction it would be in effect, I think, enforcing by injunction a contract for ordinary personal services, the right to grant which was at least questioned by the Court of Errors and Appeals in Taylor Iron & Steel Co. v. Nichols, 73 N. J. Eq. 684, at page 691, 69 Atl. 186, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 933, 133 Am. St. Rep. 753.

Considering all of the circumstances, I am of the opinion that the decree asked for by complainant would do more injustice than justice, and this relief will be denied.

Second. Will the contracts be canceled or will the complainant be permitted to seek such remedy as he may at law?

The individual defendants and the Driver-Harris Company insist that the contracts were obtained under such circumstances as that they are void or voidable, both at law and in equity, and should be canceled by the court.

[7] It must be taken as settled that the employer has a property right in the services of his employes, and is entitled to protection against interference with no sufficient justification. Lumley v. Gye, 2 B. & B. 216; Quinn v. Leatham, Ap. Cases 1901, 495; Noice v. Brown, 39 N. J. Law, 569; Frank & Dugan v. Herold, 63 N. J. Eq. 443, 52 Atl. 152; Jonas Glass Co. v. Glass Bottle Blowers' Ass'n, 77 N. J. Eq. 219, 79 Atl. 262, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 445; Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. v. Mitchell, 245 U. S. 229, 38 Sup. Ct. 65, 62 L. Ed. 260, L. R. A. 1918C, 497, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 461. And it is likewise true that an employe at will may at any time leave his employer, and that a stranger may, by an offer of higher wages, induce him to leave his employment and become employed with the stranger. A stranger may not, however, interfere with the employment for no justifiable reason.

In this class of cases motive plays a most important part. It is insisted by Wilbur B. Driver that his purpose in inducing the employes to leave the Driver-Harris Company was to advantage himself, in that he intended to establish a business and that the employes were essential to him. While this may have been one of his purposes, I have already held that he also deliberately purposed to injure the Driver-Harris Company.

Whether, considering all the circumstances or voidable I find it unnecessary to decide, because I have reached the conclusion that the contracts are voidable, at least, upon another ground.

[8] At the time the contracts were entered into the nation was at war, and all of its energies were directed toward the successful prosecution of the war. It was necessary, of course, that war materials should be produced, and that such production should not be interfered with. In order that this production might be accomplished, it was essential that the plants engaged in the production of war material should have an adequate supply of labor. The policy of the government necessarily was that labor engaged in war industries should remain static; that disputes with respect to wages and conditions should be settled through government agencies. This public policy had been announced by various government boards established under the authority of acts of Congress. The situation became such that prior to the hearing of this case a government regulation had been issued under which, after the 1st of August, the government took control of the supply of ordinary labor. The fact that it did not act, however, until August 1st, does not indicate that there was not in existence at the time these contracts were made a distinct public policy which must be recognized and considered by the court.

[14] Public policy has been defined as that principle of law which holds that no person can lawfully do that which has a tendency to be injurious to the public, or against the public good, which may be designated, as it sometimes has been, the policy of the law, or public policy in relation to the administration of the law (13 Corpus Juris, tit. "Contracts," § 360, and cases cited).

While it may be too much to say that there was any public policy which prevented labor from moving from plant to plant of its own volition, induced by offer of higher pay or what not, yet I think it safe to say that there was a public policy which was offended when a person, for his own advantage, deliberately proceeded to demoralize an organization the continuance of which was essential to the production of necessary war material.

I agree with Jessell, Master of the Rolls, in Sun Printing Registering Co. v. Sampson, 19 Eq. 462, 465, 21 B. R. O., 696, who said: "It must not be forgotten that you are not to extend arbitrarily those rules which say that a given contract is void as being against public policy, because if there is one thing which more than any other public policy requires it is that men of full age and of competent understanding shall have the utmost liberty of contracting, and that their contracts, when entered into freely and voluntarily, shall be held sacred, and shall be enforced by the courts of justice. Therefore you have this paramount public policy to consider—that you are not lightly to interfere with this freedom of contract."

should be permitted to live his own life, unhampered by any restrictions except such as are necessary for the public welfare. Applying the test which I think must always be applied to a sumptuary rule, i. e. its necessity for the public welfare, not its tendency toward the public good, I find that the rule of public policy I conclude exists is grounded upon a public necessity just as urgent, certainly, as that which renders contracts involving an immoral consideration void.

It is, of course, recognized that, in order that the freedom to contract may be preserved, in national emergencies it must be abridged. Ordinarily this is accomplished by direct action of the government through the Legislature or executive. I think, however, that contracts, even if not contrary to any express statutory enactment or governmental regulation, may be so opposed to a definite public policy, which may be gathered from the laws and regulations in effect, as that it may be at least voidable.

At the time the contracts were entered into, and it was contemplated by Wilbur B. Driver that a new business should be established, the government had officially discouraged the establishment of new industries in New Jersey and certain adjoining states because of the fuel situation. It had, as above stated, taken control of the issuance of securities for capital for new business because of the money situation. The establishment of the new business contemplated by Wilbur B. Driver was one within the government regulations.

It is said (13 Corpus Juris, tit. "Contracts," § 362) that there are many things which the law does not expressly prohibit or penalize which are so mischievous in their tendency that on grounds of public policy they are not permitted to be the subject of an enforceable agreement; that public policy varies with the time and place; and that the mere fact that a precedent cannot be found will not prevent a court from declaring a contract void as against public policy. Upon its being brought clearly to the attention of the individual defendants that the effect of their performance of their contracts would operate to the disadvantage of the government they forthwith repudiated them, and the contracts remained wholly executory. I think that under the circumstances they were within their legal rights, and that no action can be brought upon the contracts, either in law or equity.

I must not be considered as intimating that it is a complete defense in law or equity, in an action brought upon a contract, that the effect of the performance of the contract would be to injuriously affect the government in a war activity. Nor do I intimate an opinion as to whether there may be a recovery upon an executed contract for the sale of merchandise such as sugar, for instance, in violation of government regulations. Nor do I intimate that in the instant case, if the employes had worked for Driver, there could be no compensation recovered by them for their services. Principles of law which I am not now considering would in such instances have their application.

[9-11] What I hold, and all that I hold, is that contracts obtained as a part of a scheme which, if successful, would have the effect of disrupting the organization of a plant engaged in the manufacture of war material, essential to the prosecution of the war, are voidable so long as they remain executory. And this is so, whether the parties intended to advantage themselves and had in mind no thought of injury to the government or not.

The rule that, where a contract is void as against public policy, the parties will be left by the court in the situation in which the court finds them when they are in pari delicto, has no application in the case at bar. In the first place, the parties are not in pari delicto. The contracts on their face are valid. The purpose of injuring the organization of the Driver-Harris Company was in the mind of Wilbur B. Driver alone. It was not in the minds of the employes. If the rule referred to applied to this class of cases at all, the instant case would be within the exceptions referred to in 13 Corpus Juris, §§ 474, 475.

While ordinarily the question as to whether a contract is contrary to public policy is to be determined by the court, yet there have been cases in which, where the question depended upon the circumstances under which the contract was entered into, it has been left to the jury as a question of fact. 6 Ruling Case Law, tit. "Contracts," § 118.

At the time the employes entered into the contracts they had no knowledge that the contracts were part of a plan contrary to public policy. Either the complainant had such knowledge or he had not. If he had knowledge he was guilty of fraud, and there was fraud on one part or mistake on the other. If he had no knowledge, there was mutual mistake. In either event, the jurisdiction of this court, about which there has been raised no question, is complete.

The employes in repudiating the contracts did only that which a sound public policy required them to do at the time. The entire issue has been submitted to the court. I am determining this case not only upon the ground that the contracts are unenforceable in equity, but upon the ground that the contracts are unenforceable either in law or in equity. Equity, having assumed jurisdiction, will determine the entire controversy in order to prevent a multiplicity of suits. I think the individual defendants are entitled to a cancellation of their contracts.

Third. Should complainant be enjoined from enticing away employes of defendant Driver-Harris Company?

In view of the fact that the government has taken over the supply of labor in such industries as the Driver-Harris Company, and inasmuch as it does not appear that Wilbur B. Driver intends to, or that, if he did so intend, he could, pursue the tactics complained of, I think there is no necessity for the relief asked for under this head, and will deny the application for an injunction without prejudice, expressing no opinion upon the merits.

[12, 13] Fourth. Should Driver-Harris Company be enjoined from interfering with the business of the complainant and the Murray Wire Company and the Wilbur B. Driver Company in the manner set forth in the cross-bill of said defendants?

The charge is that, in order to annoy and impede Driver, the Driver-Harris Company protested to the Secretary of State against the granting of a charter to the Wilbur B. Driver Company, to the War Industries Board, to the Capital Issues Committee, to the Priority Commissioner, and to various other governmental agencies against the establishment of the business contemplated to be established by Driver; that in these protests certain false representations were made; that the Driver-Harris Company also, by threats and false representations, induced the individual defendants to break their contracts; and that it made false misrepresentations to customers or prospective customers of the complainant or the Murray Wire Company with the result that the business of the complainant has been affected; and it is said that the actions of the Driver-Harris Company tend to stifle competition.

So far as the protest to the Secretary of State is concerned, it was justified. The similarity of the name "Wilbur B. Driver Company" to the name "Driver-Harris Company," under the circumstances, is sufficient to warrant a protest. Whether the use of the name will be enjoined or not is another question. The protests which were made to the government boards and officials were made to boards and officials created by law for the very purpose of passing upon the subject-matters referred to in the protests.

There is no direct proof of express malice on the part of the Driver-Harris Company. There is no proof that any statements made by the Driver-Harris Company were so false, and knowingly false, as that malice can be implied. Most of the statements are backed up by the testimony of the government officials in charge of the particular work. The only statement that is contained in any of the letters that is at all out of the way is that Driver's actuating motive was revenge. It may be that his actuating motive was not revenge, but I cannot say that one of his motives was not revenge. I think the Driver-Harris Company had reasonable grounds to suppose that his motive was revenge. The officers of the Driver-Harris Company may have made the statement or statements that Driver had failed, and that he had not performed his obligations to persons whom he was morally obligated to protect when he returned to the Driver-Harris Company. These statements, if made, were not sent broadcast. They were made, if at all, by employer to employé. I cannot say that they were sufficient to warrant any injunctive relief. It would have to be a strong case, indeed, before this court would enjoin a defendant with proceeding with remedies apparently open to him, and that is what I am asked to do on this branch of the case. I do not mean to say that the exercise of legal remedies may not be so vexatious as to warrant this court intervening, but no such situation has developed here. The relief asked for will be denied.

I will advise a decree in accordance with this opinion. Settle the decree on three days' notice.

(38 N. J. Eq. 378)

CROSS v. PRINTING CORPORATION.
(No. 45/177.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. Aug. 31, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. CORPORATIONS §687—RIGHTS AND POWERS—ATTACK ON CHATTEL MORTGAGE.

A receiver of a foreign corporation, whether appointed under the statute or the general equity power of the court, may, in the right of creditors, attack a chattel mortgage for defects in recording.

2. CHATTEL MORTGAGES §63—AFFIDAVIT—CONSIDERATION.

An affidavit annexed to a chattel mortgage, reciting merely that the consideration is so much money, is fatally defective, and the mortgage is invalid as against a receiver of a foreign corporation.

3. CHATTEL MORTGAGES §17—MORTGAGE BY AGENT OF CORPORATION—VALIDITY AS AGAINST CREDITORS.

When goods are purchased by a corporation for its use, and are delivered to it, but paper title lodged for an instant in the name of an agent of the corporation who gives a chattel mortgage to the vendor, all with the knowledge of the vendor, the chattel mortgage is void as against the creditor of the corporation, the agent never having any present interest, actual or potential, in the goods.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

4. CHATTEL MORTGAGES §192—DELAY IN RECORDING.

Chattel mortgage not recorded until one month after its date was invalid as against all of the mortgagor's creditors who had claims existing at the time of the recording of the mortgage.

Bill by Covert Cross against the Printing Corporation, a Maryland corporation, to determine the validity of two chattel mortgages. Chattel mortgages decreed invalid, and claims of mortgagees allowed as general claims.

Joseph Kraemer, of Newark, for complainant and receiver. George Porter, for estate of Daniel H. Tolman. Nathan Erlich, of Newark, for Louis Modell. Hartshorne, Inley & Leake and John O. Muller, all of Jersey City, for Conner, Fendler & Co.

LANE, V. C. [1] The question to be determined is the validity of two chattel mortgages, one purporting to be made by the Printing Corporation to Daniel H. Tolman, dated December 31, 1917, to secure the sum of $1,200; the other purporting to be made by A. E. Sumner to Conner, Fendler & Co., dated March 15, 1918, to secure the sum of $570. The validity of the respective mortgages is challenged by the receiver of the Printing Corporation, as well as by Modell, a judgment creditor of A. E. Sumner and the Printing Corporation. The receiver was appointed under the statute. The corporation is a foreign corporation. I think that he was properly appointed under the statute (Atwater v. Baskerville, 104 Atl. 310, and Dolan v. Universal Fire Brick Co., 104 Atl. 86), and that he may attack the chattel mortgage in the right of creditors. Graham v. Spielmann, 50 N. J. Eq. 120, 24 Atl. 571. Even if it be assumed that he was appointed under the general equity power of the court, I think he may attack the chattel mortgages upon the reasoning of Brockhurst v. Cox, 71 N. J. Eq. 703, 64 Atl. 182, affirmed 72 N. J. Eq. 950, 73 Atl. 1117.

[2] I will deal with the Tolman mortgage first. The affidavit of consideration recites merely that the true consideration of the mortgage is the sum of $1,200. This is fatally defective, under Chattel Mortgage Act, § 4 (1 Comp. Stat. page 463); Ehler v. Turner, 35 N. J. Eq. 68; Collier v. Tully, 77 N. J. Eq. 439, 77 Atl. 1079, affirmed 78 N. J. Eq. 557, 80 Atl. 491, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 78. The chattel mortgage is therefore void, against the receiver.

The claim of the Tolman estate will be allowed as a general claim for the amount actually advanced by Tolman to the corporation. The amount of the usury or bonus will be deducted, and for this reason: The loan was authorized at a meeting of the board of directors. The meeting was not properly called. One of the directors was not notified. While the corporation is liable, I think, for the amount of money actually received by it and expended for its benefit, I do not think it is liable for the usury. Payment of the bonus would be justified only by express contract, and there is no evidence from which I can find that Sumner was authorized, either expressly or impliedly, to make such a contract.

[4] With respect to the claim of the Conner-Fendler Company, I find the facts to be that arrangements between a representative of Conner, Fendler & Co. and Sumner for the purchase of certain goods; that it was contemplated by both parties that the goods should be purchased by the corporation; that Conner, Fendler & Co. knew that the goods were to be installed in the plant of the corporation; that at the last minute the suggestion was made by the representative of Conner, Fendler & Co. that the goods should be sold in the name of Sumner and that Sumner should give the chattel mortgage. The chattel mortgage was dated March 15, 1918, and was not recorded until April 15, 1918. There is no doubt but that the chattel mortgage is invalid as against all creditors of Sumner who had claims existing at the time of the record of the chattel mortgage, April 15, 1918. Roe v. Meding, 53 N. J. Eq. 350, 30 Atl. 587, 33 Atl. 394; Brockhurst v. Cox, supra; Wilkinson, Gaddis & Co. v. Bohlen, 88 N. J. Law, 680, 97 Atl. 279. But with the creditors of Sumner I have no concern.

[3] I find that, although the goods were nominally purchased in the name of Sumner, they were actually purchased, with the knowledge of all parties, by and for the corporation; that Sumner acted as the agent of the corporation at the time he purchased the goods, and at the time he gave the chattel mortgage; that the chattel mortgage, not being given in the name of the corporation, is invalid as against its creditors. To permit parties to purchase goods and to have apparent legal title lodged for an instant of time in an agent, and have that agent give a chattel mortgage, which, upon being recorded, would be valid, as against creditors of the purchaser would open the door to fraud, and would in effect nullify the recording provisions of the Chattel Mortgage Act. The goods sold never were the property of Sumner, but were from the time of purchase the property of the corporation. Sumner never had a present property, either actual or potential, in the things mortgaged. Looker v. Peckwell, 88 N. J. Law, 258; Smithurst v. Edmunds, 14 N. J. Eq. 408; Cumberland National Bank v. Baker, 57 N. J. Eq. 231, 40 Atl. 850.

The question as to the ownership of these goods as affecting the rights of Modell, has also been submitted to me, and the foregoing disposes of this feature of the case. The claim of Conner, Fendler & Co. will be allowed as a general claim against the assets of the corporation.

I will advise an order in accordance with foregoing conclusions. Settle order on three days' notice.

(89 N. J. Eq. 409)

CLARK et al. v. PAINTED POST LUMBER CO. (No. 43/373.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. Aug. 19, 1918.)

1. CORPORATIONS §—682—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—INSOLVENCY—PREFERENCES—DOMESTIC CREDITORS.

Domestic creditors are not entitled to a preference over foreign creditors in case of dissolution or insolvency of a foreign corporation, in view of Corporation Act, §§ 58, 85, 86.

2. CORPORATIONS §—688—INSOLVENCY—DISTRIBUTION OF ASSETS—FOREIGN CREDITORS.

The courts of this state cannot force a foreign creditor of a foreign corporation to submit his claims to domestic tribunals under penalty of losing the right to a participation in the distribution of the assets of such corporation on its insolvency, but such foreign creditors may be forced to submit their claims as to assets within the state.

3. CORPORATIONS §—688—DISTRIBUTION OF ASSETS—FOREIGN RECEIVERSHIP.

Where a foreign receiver has been appointed for a foreign corporation, and an ancillary receiver has been appointed in this state, domestic creditors, who have filed claims in this state, may have the validity of their claims settled here, whereupon such assets may be removed to the foreign tribunal for distribution.

Proceeding by William H. Clark and Charles H. Brewster against the Painted Post Lumber Company for the appointment of a receiver. On motion to pay over funds to foreign receiver. Motion granted.

Robert M. Boyd, Jr., of Montclair, for New Jersey receiver. Lloyd Thompson, of Westfield, for foreign creditors. Mark Townsend, Jr., of Jersey City, for Omer G. Russell, a domestic creditor.

LANE, V. C. Painted Post Lumber Company is an insolvent corporation of the state of New York. After a receiver had been appointed in New York, application was made to this court, under the provisions of the Corporation Act, § 65, as amended (P. L. 1912, p. 535), for the appointment of a receiver in this jurisdiction. Such receiver was appointed. He gathered in all the assets in this state, and now has in his hands as the proceeds thereof some $6,000. An order was made on June 12, 1917, requiring creditors to file their claims within two months of the date thereof. Claims of domestic creditors, as filed with him, aggregate some $2,000; claims of foreign creditors, as filed with him, aggregate approximately $10,000.

The receiver now seeks to settle his accounts as receiver under appointment by this court, and prays for an order that he may pay the balance over to himself in his capacity as receiver appointed in New York. The New Jersey creditors object, insisting, first, that they are entitled, so far as the assets in this state are concerned, to a preference; and, second, that, if not, this court should so control the assets within this state as that domestic creditors will not be forced into another jurisdiction to obtain payment of the amounts to which they may be entitled from the assets of the estate upon a general distribution.

[1] First. Domestic creditors are not entitled to a preference. The policy of this state, expressed in its statute law is not to prefer domestic creditors over foreign creditors, in any case of dissolution or insolvency. Section 58, Act Concerning Corporations, Revision of 1896 (2 Comp. Statutes, p. 1637); sections 85 and 86, same act (2 Comp. Statutes, p. 1652). The New Jersey creditors rely upon the language of Chief Justice Beasley in Hurd v. Elizabeth, 41 N. J. Law, 1, at page 3, in which case the Chief Justice, speaking of the power of a receiver to sue in a foreign jurisdiction, said:

"It [the power] could not be exercised in a foreign jurisdiction to the disadvantage of creditors resident there, because it is the policy of every government to retain in its own hands the property of a debtor until all domestic claims against it have been satisfied."

But the Chief Justice, I think, did not mean, by "satisfied," "paid in full." What he meant was that the court would not permit the exercise of power by a foreign receiver, unless it were certain that the legal rights of domestic creditors would be protected. In Irwin v. Granite State Provident Association, 56 N. J. Eq. 244, 38 Atl. 680, Reed, Vice Chancellor, held that the assets within this state did not change in the least the proportion to which the New Jersey shareholders would be entitled; that the assets here were to be taken into account as a part of the fund to be distributed. In Stone v. N. J. & Hudson River Ry. Co., 75 N. J. Law, 172, 66 Atl. 1072, the Supreme Court, through Mr. Justice Swayze, said:

"It is urged, however, that the present plaintiff is a foreign receiver, and the defendant a New Jersey corporation. We are unable to see why these facts should be allowed to give the New Jersey creditor an advantage over other creditors. We do not allow a foreign receiver to exercise his powers in our jurisdiction to the disadvantage of creditors resident here; but, subject to this restraint, comity requires that he should be acknowledged and aided. Hurd v. Elizabeth, 12 Vroom [41 N. J. Law] 1. Where it is necessary, our courts will appoint an ancillary receiver; but the assets will be so administered that creditors in this state and in the foreign jurisdiction shall fare alike. Irwin v. Granite State Provident Association, 11 Dick. Ch. Rep. [56 N. J. Eq.] 244 [38 Atl. 680]."

Second. While the receiver was appointed here after the appointment of the receiver in New York, he was appointed under the provisions of the statute. Section 65, as amended, P. L. 1912, p. 535. The statutory procedure was followed. Under the provisions of section 75 of the Corporation Act (2 Comp. Statutes, p. 1648), an order was made directing creditors to bring in their claims within two months of the date of the order. Notice of such order in pursuance thereof was mailed to all of the creditors of the company. In speaking of such an order the Court of Errors and Appeals, in McDermott v. Woodhouse, 87 N. J. Eq. 615, 101 Atl. 376, said, arguendo:

"As far as we know, the only authority for such a proceeding is section 75 of the Corporation Act (C. S. p. 1648); but this can only apply to a New Jersey corporation. Our courts cannot force a New York creditor of a New York corporation to submit his claim to our tribunals under penalty of losing all right to participate in the distribution of the assets."

It was not necessary for the determination of the cause then before the court that the point should be determined, and I think it must be considered dictum. It has been contended that the effect of the decision in McDermott v. Woodhouse is that this court cannot appoint a receiver of a foreign corporation under the statute, and that any receiver appointed of the assets of a foreign corporation within this jurisdiction, under the general equity power of the court, is merely ancillary, and that his sole duty is to gather in the assets and turn the proceeds over to the receiver appointed in the place of the domicile of the corporation, assuming that such a receiver has been appointed, and that, if no such receiver has been appointed, the court is powerless to act. The result would be either that, before a receiver had been appointed by the courts in the domicile of the corporation, the courts of this jurisdiction would be powerless to act, and the creditors would be left to their legal remedies, and the assets would be subject to seizure and distribution among those who acted first (there would be no way of preventing preferences), or, if the court might appoint a receiver, then, after gathering in the assets, there could be no distribution until a receiver had been appointed in the jurisdiction of the domicile of the corporation, which might be never.

The courts of this state certainly would not force its citizens to apply to a foreign tribunal, which might have control of nothing but the corporate entity, to set in motion a proceeding to the end that a decree might be made directing the method of distribution of assets within this jurisdiction. Indeed, a situation is not hard to imagine in such event where the creditors would be absolutely powerless. The jurisdiction of the domicile might not have a procedure which could be set in motion by creditors. My understanding of the New York law is that no receivership of a corporation is possible, except at the instance of the Attorney General. I have two cases now before me. Dolan v. Universal Fire Brick Co., 104 Atl. 86, and Cross v. Printing Corp., 104 Atl. 727, one a Delaware and the other a Maryland corporation. All the assets of both were here. Receivers were appointed here. They have gathered in the assets and are ready to distribute. No receivers have been appointed in the places of the domiciles. Must this court wait until such receivers are appointed? I think not.

I considered the situation in Atwater v. Baskerville, 104 Atl. 810, and Dolan v. Universal Fire Brick Co., not yet officially reported, and held that the court might appoint a receiver under the statute, and that the procedure would be as nearly as practicable the same as if the corporation were domestic. If I am wrong in this, and if the receiver must be considered as appointed under the general equity power of the court, still I think the situation will not be changed, for under such a proceeding the assets within this jurisdiction may be gathered in and their proceeds distributed. The court would adopt a course which would be fair to all creditors and would follow the statutory procedure by analogy as nearly as practicable. The contention referred to above ignores the following, as stated by Chief Justice Beasley in Hurd v. Elizabeth:

"That the officer of a foreign court should not be permitted, as against the claims of creditors resident here, to remove from this state the assets of the debtor, is a proposition that appears to be asserted by all the decisions."

This remark of the Chief Justice was quoted by Vice Chancellor Green in Falk v. Janes, 49 N. J. Eq. 484, at page 489, 23 Atl. 813. At page 490 of 49 N. J. Eq., at page 815 of 23 Atl., the Vice Chancellor said:

"Such limitation is based, then, on the principle that the first duty of the state is to its own citizens."

Vice Chancellor Reed, in Irwin v. Granite State Provident Association, 56 N. J. Eq. 244, at page 250, 38 Atl. 680, said that the citizens of this state should not be driven into the court of another state to obtain their distributive shares.

To the extent that there are assets within this state, domestic creditors are entitled ordinarily to have their rights settled by the judicial tribunals of this state. I do not mean to infer that there may not be cases where the claims of creditors here have arisen under such circumstances as that, in cases of insolvency, they will be remitted to the foreign jurisdiction. I am now considering the ordinary relationship of debtor and creditor, created under such circumstances as that the law of this state would apply in the determination of their legal rights. Were it not for the appointment of a receiver in this jurisdiction, domestic creditors might, if the corporation were a foreign corporation, not recognized under the laws of this state, have proceeded by attachment. If the corporation was one recognized by the laws of this state and authorized to do business here, they might sue at law. By the intervention of this court the creditors have been deprived of their ordinary legal remedies. For the remedies of which they have been deprived there must be substituted, so far as assets within this state are concerned, another remedy. If section 75 of the Corporation Act does not apply, then there is no doubt in my mind but that the court, before it permitted the assets, gathered in by an ancillary receiver, to be paid over to a foreign receiver, would devise a procedure by which domestic creditors would be notified of the situation and permitted to assert their claims in this jurisdiction. In no other way could the duty of the state toward its own citizens, which has been repeatedly held to be to retain within its own hands property of a debtor until domestic claims against it have been satisfied, and to refrain from driving its citizens into the courts of another state to litigate claims with respect to assets within this state, be subserved.

[2] But I think there is adequate provision made in the statute. It is indeed true that our courts cannot force a New York creditor of a New York corporation to submit his claims to our tribunals under penalty of losing the right to a participation in the distribution of the assets; but neither should our courts force our own citizens into a foreign tribunal to litigate their claims with respect to assets within this jurisdiction, and our courts can force foreign creditors to submit their claims to our tribunals under penalty of losing the right to participate in assets within this state. I am speaking now of abstract power. The policy of this state is well stated by the Supreme Court in Stone v. N. J. & Hudson River Ry. Co., 75 N. J. Law, 174, 66 Atl. 1072, to be to see to it that the assets here are so administered that creditors in this state and in the foreign jurisdiction shall fare alike. If the sole duty of an ancillary receiver appointed in this state is to gather in assets and to remit to a foreign jurisdiction the proceeds thereof, as it is claimed is intimated by the following language of the Court of Errors and Appeals in McDermott v. Woodhouse:

"It is manifestly quite as necessary to ascertain the total assets of the corporation as its total liabilities in order to fix the amount needed to pay creditors, and these assets can only be finally ascertained in the courts of the domicile to which assets may be remitted by courts of other forums acting through ancillary receivers"

—then the reasoning indulged in by the courts in Hurd v. Elizabeth, Stone v. N. J. & Hudson River Ry. Co., and Irwin v. Granite State Provident Association was unnecessary, for, if the duty of an ancillary receiver is thus limited, the foreign receiver himself might as well be permitted to act.

The question is one of far-reaching importance. In the instant case, the domicile of the corporation is in New York, and the policy of its law is similar to that of ours with respect to a ratable distribution among creditors. But it is not beyond the range of possibility that in some of the other states there may be laws with respect to priorities quite opposed to the policy of our law, and it seems to me to be inconceivable that this court, having control of assets within this state, would remit its citizens to a foreign tribunal, which might have control only of the entity of the corporation, and compel them to submit themselves to a method of distribution in conflict with the policy of this state under laws having no extraterritorial force. Comity does not extend so far. Hurd v. Elizabeth, supra, at pages 4 and 5, and cases cited; and see Catlin v. Wilcox Silver Plate Co., 125 Ind. 477, 24 N. E. 250, 8 L. R. A. 62, 18 Am. St. Rep. 338. If domestic cred-as; and it may be contended that the effect of such a determination does not stop here. The foreign corporations, which may be authorized to do business in this state, are not only those incorporated under the laws of a sister state, but also those incorporated under the laws of any foreign state, kingdom, or government. Can it be thought possible that the courts of this state will, as against the protests of domestic creditors, direct its receiver to transmit the proceeds of assets to the foreign jurisdiction, which happens to be that in which the corporation was created, and remit its citizens to their remedies there? And yet it may be so contended.

[3] It seems to me to be clear that the creditors who have filed claims in this jurisdiction are entitled to have the validity of their claims settled here; that this court must retain control of the assets until it is assured that the validity of the claims, as settled here, will be recognized by the foreign tribunal, and the creditors paid their ratable proportion of all the assets. Upon the court being so assured, the assets may be removed to the foreign tribunal for distribution there. It is conceivable, if the assets were to be directed to be turned over without condition, that the domestic creditors would never be paid. There may be settlement, and the company permitted to resume its business. In the meantime, the assets in New Jersey will have been removed, and the New Jersey creditors left helpless, unless they actively intervene in New York and subject themselves to the provisions of the New York law. Vice Chancellor Reed, in Irwin v. Granite State Provident Association, 56 N. J. Eq. at page 251, 38 Atl. 680, pointed out that either of two courses might be pursued in a similar case; that the assets might be paid over to the foreign receiver upon his giving a bond in this state to pay the New Jersey shareholders their distributive shares, or the order might be that sufficient assets be retained here to be distributed through the hands of the receiver in this state, but according to the proportion fixed by the decree of the foreign court.

I think that the proper course of procedure in the instant case is to require the receiver to act upon the claims filed with him in this jurisdiction, either to allow or disallow them, to present these claims in the New York receivership, and to secure the action of the New York court upon them. The assets may then be turned over to the New York receiver, upon his giving bond that he will repay to the New Jersey receiver the amount of the assets now turned over to the New York receiver, unless within a reasonable time there be paid to the claimants whose claims are filed with the New Jersey receiver their fair share. The form of the bond is not settled definitely. I will hear counsel. It is not the policy of the court to interfere to any greater extent than necessary in the winding-up proceedings pending in a foreign jurisdiction. The result to be accomplished is to protect the domestic creditors to the extent of the assets within the jurisdiction, so that they may not be obliged to submit to the foreign jurisdiction the question of the validity of their claims, and so that they may not be driven into a court of another state to obtain their distributive shares. Of course, if the domestic creditors desire to share in the general distribution, the foreign court may compel them to come within the foreign jurisdiction. If so compelled, the creditors may elect to take whatever they can get from a distribution of the assets within this jurisdiction. If they so elect, I think there is nothing that this court can do but to distribute the assets here, unless it can be assured that the claimants here will be permitted to share in the general distribution without being obliged to litigate in the foreign tribunal.

Settle order on five days' notice.

(361 Pa. 485)

JENNINGS v. MALEY.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 8, 1918.)

1. JUDGMENT \S 554—BAR—EJECTMENT SUIT.

Under Act May 8, 1901 (P. L. 142), providing that defendant in ejectment, in addition to plea of not guilty, shall set forth the ground of defense, with an abstract of title, and Act June 7, 1915 (P. L. 887), authorizing judgment on the pleadings, where answer did not aver any defense on the merits, but set up a former judgment for plaintiff for the same land, the court properly entered judgment on the pleadings.

2. EJECTMENT \S 75—ANSWER AS DEMURRER.

Where defendant filed no abstract of title, nor plea of "not guilty," as required by Act May 8, 1901 (P. L. 142), but merely set up in bar the judgment in a prior ejectment action between the same parties, involving the same premises, such answer or special plea may be regarded as a demurrer to plaintiff's suit.

3. EJECTMENT \S 120(3) — RECOVERY BY PLAINTIFF — RE-ENTRY BY DEFENDANT — SECOND ACTION.

Under Act Feb. 1, 1834 (P. L. 26) § 1, in case of eviction and re-entry by defendant on lands recovered in ejectment after execution and return of writ of habere facias possessionem, the plaintiff must bring new ejectment, unless alias or pluries writ can be issued within three years from return day of preceding writ.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Columbia County.

Action by Bridget Jennings against Annie Maley. From a decree refusing defendant's motion for leave to file a plea in abatement, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The following is the opinion of Evans, P. J., in the common pleas:

Briefly, the docket entry shows the following in this case:

The præcipe, plaintiff's statement, and abstract of title, filed October 25, 1915. Same day, summons in ejectment issued for land described in præcipe, etc. Returned served on defendant by copy, etc.

December 1, 1915, præcipe for appearance for defendant filed.

January 3, 1916, plea in abatement filed.

February 5, 1916, answer to plea in abatement filed.

February 14, 1916, ruled for argument at March argument court—argue.

April 3, 1916, opinion of the court filed—plea in abatement disallowed. Same day, exception to opinion of the court filed, exception noted, and bill sealed.

May 23, 1916, petition for rehearing filed. Same day, petition denied, and reargument refused.

June 7, 1916, bond in the sum of $200 with surety filed. Same day, bond and surety approved.

June 7, 1916, certiorari from Supreme Court, returnable second Monday of April, 1917, filed.

March 7, 1917, certificate, showing amount involved exceeds $1,500, filed.

April 10, 1917, remittitur from Supreme Court filed. Appeal quashed.

April 13, 1917, rule granted on defendant to file answer, plea, and abstract of title within 30 days from service or judgment.

May 19, 1917, defendant's answer to rule filed.

May 25, 1917, rule granted (the rule now for determination) on defendant to show cause why judgment should not be entered for plaintiff for land described in writ for want of a sufficient answer, plea, and abstract of title.

[1] Ejectment is a possessory action, and the method of procedure is governed solely by the acts of May 8, 1901 (P. L. 142), and June 7, 1915 (P. L. 887). Section 2 of the act of May 8, 1901 (P. L. 142), provides that the plaintiff in ejectment shall file a declaration, which shall consist of a concise statement of his cause of action with an abstract of the title under which he claims the land in dispute, and in addition to the plea of "not guilty," now required by law, the defendant shall file an answer in nature of a special plea in which he shall set forth his grounds of defense, with an abstract of the title by which he claims. Section 1 of the act of June 7, 1915 (P. L. 887), amending section 2 of the act of May 8, 1901 (P. L. 142), goes one step further and authorizes the court on rule to enter such judgment on the pleadings, in favor of either party, as it may appear to the court the party is entitled to.

The defendant in the case at bar has not filed an abstract of title by which she claims nor entered the plea of "not guilty" as required by section 2 of the act of May 8, 1901. In the answer filed she has contented herself merely by filing an answer which may be regarded as a special plea setting forth her grounds of defense as follows:

(1) That the said Bridget Jennings was the plaintiff in No. 100, December term, 1910, in this court, and that the deponent, Annie Maley, was the defendant in said action, and that the subject-matter in this action and the prior action are identical.

(2) That the plaintiff proceeded to final judgment, in this court to No. 100, December term, 1910, thus recovering a judgment against the defendant and in favor of the plaintiff for the identical cause of action now on trial and that said judgment is at the present time in full force and effect as a judgment of this court in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant for the subject-matter in controversy.

(3) The defendant for further answer thereto avers and says that the prior action, to wit No. 100, December term, 1910, being in full force and effect as a judgment at law in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant for the same matter in controversy is a bar to the proceedings in this case, wherefore the defendant respectfully prays for judgment.

[2] The defendant's answer or special plea may be regarded as a demurrer to the plaintiff's suit, and as such all the facts averred in the plaintiff's declaration, statement, and abstract of title should be regarded as true. Assuming that the facts are true as therein averred, the plaintiff is prima facie entitled on the pleadings to judgment for the land described in the writ.

[3] It is averred in the plaintiff's abstract of title: That she was peaceably in possession of the premises as owner in fee simple and that on or about the 31st day of March, 1915, the defendant forcibly and without right took possession of the same and still continues to hold the unlawful and wrongful possession of the same. It is likewise true that the plaintiff brought ejectment against the defendant for the identical land described in the writ in this suit to No. 100, December term, 1910, and recovered judgment January 9, 1911: that on January 11, 1911, a writ of habere facias possessionem issued, and the sheriff by virtue thereof put the plaintiff in possession of the land January 25, 1911. More than three years later, viz. on March 31, 1915, the defendant again unlawfully took possession of the premises from the plaintiff. In case of eviction and re-entry by a defendant on lands recovered in ejectment, after the execution and return of a writ of habere facias possessionem, the plaintiff is obliged to resort to a new ejectment, unless an alias or pluries writ can be issued within three years from the return day of the preceding writ. Section 1, Act Feb. 1, 1834 (P. L. 26; Stewart-Purdon, p. 1302, pl. 27).

And now, December 3, 1917, in accordance with the views herein expressed, judgment is directed to be entered for the plaintiff for the land described in writ.

The lower court dismissed defendant's motion for leave to file plea in abatement. Defendant appealed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, MOSCHISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

James F. Minogue, of Ashland, and Edward J. Flynn, for appellant. William H. Rhawn, of Catawissa, and Christian A. Small, of Bloomsburg, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. Defendant's motion to file a plea in abatement was properly denied, and the judgment which followed its disallowance is affirmed, on the opinion of the learned court below disallowing it.

(361 Pa. 504)

COMMONWEALTH ex rel. BROWN, Atty. Gen., v. GROVE et al., County Com'rs.
(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 3, 1918.)

1. BRIDGES & 21(2)—MAINTENANCE.

By repealing Act March 15, 1911 (P. L. 21), duty of maintaining county bridge upon a state highway was reimposed upon county in which it was located, and continued under Act May 31, 1911 (P. L. 468); it being immaterial whether bridge became a county bridge by proceedings under Act June 13, 1836 (P. L. 551), or by reversion to county on condemnation of turnpike.

2. MANDAMUS — 94 — REPAIR OF BRIDGES — COUNTY OFFICERS.

Where county commissioners failed to properly repair county bridges located upon a state highway, as required by Act May 31, 1911 (P. L. 468), mandamus compelling them to make repairs was properly awarded at instance of Attorney General.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Centre County.

Mandamus by the Commonwealth, on relation of Francis Shunk Brown, Attorney General, against Daniel A. Grove and others, Commissioners of Centre County. From a judgment awarding a peremptory writ defendants appeal. Affirmed.

The facts appear from the following opinion by Quigley, P. J., in the common pleas:

The commonwealth of Pennsylvania prays that a peremptory mandamus may issue commanding the commissioners of Centre county to repair two certain bridges along what is known as route 56 of the system of state highways, as defined and described in Act May 31, 1911 (P. L. 468), said bridges being immediately west of the village of Lemont, Centre county, one of which is over Slab Cabin branch of Spring creek, and the other over the main branch of Spring creek. It is admitted that these two bridges are in bad and unsafe condition and repair, and are unsafe and insufficient to accommodate the public with the usual means of travel, and that said bridges are necessary for the safe and convenient travel of the public in, along, and over said highway. It is also admitted that the part of said route 56 between Lemont and State College is laid out over what was formerly known as the Agricultural College and Junction turnpike road, and that the same was duly condemned by proceedings in the quarter sessions of this county, entered to No. 2, December sessions, 1907; the final decree of condemnation having been entered January 27, 1908, and the damages assessed thereunder having been paid by the county. It is also admitted that at the time of the passage of the act of May 31, 1911, aforesaid, no duty or responsibility rested upon the supervisors of College township to build, repair, or maintain the said bridges, or either of them.

The question before us is whether the burden of repairing and putting in good order and condition these two bridges is upon the board of commissioners of Centre county or upon the highway department of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania. As we view it, the recent case of Commonwealth of Pennsylvania ex rel. v. Bird, appellant, 253 Pa. 364, 98 Atl. 648, controls this case. Judge Maxwell there held that the burden of building and maintaining county bridges that were located upon the state highways under the act of May 31, 1911, was upon the county.

The defendants urge that the difference in the nature of the bridges raises a distinction; that the bridge involved in the Bird Case was established as a county bridge by proceedings under the thirty-fifth section of the act of June 13, 1836 (P. L. 560), while the bridges in question were not so established, but reverted to the county upon condemnation of the turnpike, and, because of the fact that they were not formally declared county bridges under the act of 1836, ingeniously argue that there is a clear distinction. In effect they argue that a county bridge, within the meaning of the act, is one that is created by due process of law and requires the joint action and approval of three different bodies, viz. the grand jury, the court of quarter sessions, and the county commissioners, and unless so created they should not be treated as county bridges.

By the acts of April 20, 1905 (P. L. 237), April 25, 1907 (P. L. 104), and March 15, 1911 (P. L. 21), the repair and maintenance of the road, including these bridges between Lemont and State College, formerly the Agricultural College and Junction turnpike road, rested at the passage and approval of the Sproul Act of May 31, 1911, upon the county of Centre, and, this being the case, the bridges in question were to all intents and purposes county bridges. If this is a proper conclusion, and we think it is, the duty of the county to maintain these bridges is clear, under the ruling in Commonwealth v. Bird, supra, part of which we quote as follows: "The duty to maintain a bridge forming part of a state highway built under the act of May 31, 1911 (P. L. 468), rests upon the county, and not the commonwealth, where the duty to maintain it rested upon the county at the time of the passage of the act and mandamus will properly issue against the county commissioners to compel them to construct and maintain a suitable bridge."

The lower court awarded a writ of peremptory mandamus, directing defendants to immediately repair the bridges in question and put the same in good order and condition, suitable and safe for public travel. Defendants appealed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

ELLIS L. ORVIS and N. B. SPANGLER, both of Bellefonte, for appellants. WILLIAM H. KELLER, First Deputy Atty. Gen., FRANCIS SHUNK BROWN, Atty. Gen., and HARRY KELLER, of Bellefonte, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. [1,2] By the repealing act of March 15, 1911 (P. L. 21), the duty of maintaining the two bridges involved in this proceeding were reimposed upon the county of Centre, and that duty continues to rest upon it under section 34 of the act of May 31, 1911 (P. L. 468). Commonwealth of Pennsylvania ex rel. v. Bird, 253 Pa. 364, 98 Atl. 648.

Judgment affirmed.

(251 Pa. 499)

DE HAAS v. PENNSYLVANIA R. CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 3, 1918.)

1. CORPORATIONS — 503(1) — SUIT AGAINST CORPORATION — VENUE.

The common-law rule that a corporation can only be sued in the jurisdiction where it had its legal domicile or chief place of business has been enlarged by Act June 13, 1836 (P. L. 579) § 42, Act March 21, 1842 (P. L. 145) § 8, and Act March 17, 1856 (P. L. 388).

2. CORPORATIONS — 503(1) — SUIT AGAINST CORPORATION — VENUE.

In view of Act March 21, 1842 (P. L. 145) § 8, a domestic corporation exists in any county where it has property and exercises its corporate franchise, and, if lawfully served, must respond to any transitory action there brought against it.

3. CORPORATIONS ⇨499—SUIT AGAINST CORPORATION.

A corporation is an artificial person, and there is no reason in principle why it should enjoy an immunity from suit not common to natural persons under like circumstances.

4. DAMAGES ⇨173(2)—DECREASED EARNING CAPACITY—EVIDENCE.

In passenger's action for personal injury, evidence for plaintiff, who had just completed a course in forestry but had not taken up forestry work, as to minimum salary of graduate forester, was admissible as bearing on loss of earning power, where he was disabled from following such work.

5. DAMAGES ⇨173(1)—DECREASED EARNING CAPACITY—EVIDENCE.

In a negligence suit, decreased earning capacity in any actually available occupation may be shown by proper and satisfactory proof.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨977(5)—NEW TRIAL ⇨6—DISCRETION OF COURT.

The denial of a new trial is a matter within trial court's discretion, and Supreme Court cannot interfere except to prevent a manifest abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Clearfield County.

Trespass for personal injury by George M. De Haas against the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. Verdict for plaintiff for $6,086.88 and judgment thereon, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

James P. O'Laughlin, of Clearfield, for appellant. A. H. Woodward, of Clearfield, for appellee.

WALLING, J. This is an action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff on July 30, 1913, while a passenger on one of defendant's trains in Blair county. Defendant is a railroad corporation duly organized under the laws of Pennsylvania with its principal office in Philadelphia. This suit was brought in Clearfield county where defendant has and operates branch railroads, and where a part of its corporate property, including tracks, stations, etc., is situated. Defendant entered a special appearance and pleaded in abatement to the jurisdiction of the court, which plea was overruled, and the case went to trial, resulting in a verdict for plaintiff. From judgment entered thereon defendant has brought this appeal.

[1-3] At common law a corporation could only be sued in the territorial jurisdiction where it had its legal domicile; that is, where it had its chief place of business. Park Bros. & Co. v. Oil City Boiler Works, 204 Pa. 453, 54 Atl. 334. This was enlarged by the Act of June 13, 1836, § 42 (P. L. 579), so as to authorize suit against a corporation in any county where the cause of action arose. The Act of March 21, 1842, § 8 (P. L. 145), provides, inter alia, that, "When any action is commenced by any person or persons, or bodies corporate, against any incorporated railroad or canal company, in any county in which the corporate property of such company is wholly or in part situated, it shall be lawful," etc., directing the manner of service of process in such cases. The Act of March 17, 1856 (P. L. 388), contains a like provision as to commencing suits against corporations in general. In our opinion, under the act of 1842, this suit was properly brought in Clearfield county. There is nothing to indicate that it was intended merely as a service act. A corporation of this state exists in any county where it has property and exercises its corporate franchise, and, being lawfully served, must respond to any transitory action brought there against it. A corporation is an artificial person, and there is no reason in principle why it should enjoy an immunity from suit not common to natural persons under like circumstances. The suit seems to have been brought in accordance with a common practice of long standing and one recognized in numerous decisions of this court. These statutes are quoted at length and discussed in the opinion by Mr. Justice Dean in Bailey v. Williamsport, etc., R. R., 174 Pa. 114, 118, 34 Atl. 195, and the conclusion there is that the action must be brought in a county where the corporate property is in whole or in part situated. See, also, Jensen v. P. M. & S. St. Ry. Co., 201 Pa. 603, 51 Atl. 311; Hawn v. Pennsylvania Canal Co., 154 Pa. 455, 26 Atl. 544; Centofanti v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 244 Pa. 255, 280, 90 Atl. 558. While the defendant in Elmer v. Western Maryland Ry. Co., 253 Pa. 204, 97 Atl. 1076, was a foreign corporation, governed largely by the Act of April 8, 1851 (P. L. 353), yet the opinion there by Brother Moschzisker comprehensively embraces both classes of corporations and fully supports our conclusion in the present case. It is fair to assume that the acts of 1842 and 1856 were intended to serve some purpose, but it is difficult to discover what, unless they extend the jurisdiction of the courts to counties where corporate property is situated, for as to the method of service of process they are not substantially different from the act of 1836. In our opinion the trial court was right in overruling the plea in abatement, hence it is not necessary to consider the effect of the defendant thereafter going to trial upon the merits.

[4, 5] When injured, plaintiff was 44 years of age, and the year previous (1912) had completed a four years' course in forestry at State College, but had not taken up that work. He was permitted to offer evidence as to the minimum salary of a graduate forester, in connection with evidence that the accident had disabled him from pursuing that occupation, as bearing upon loss of earning power. The trial judge submitted this evidence to the jury with guarded instructions, and withdrew from them the evidence as to what plaintiff had been earning as a real estate salesman during the year preceding the accident, because that was not shown to be a permanent employment. The minimum salary of a forester was approximately what plaintiff had been earning as a teacher and much less than the excluded evidence indicated he had received as a real estate salesman. As plaintiff was a graduate forester and capable of entering upon that work, it was not error to show its minimum wage, although he had never actually been so employed. He had not abandoned that profession. Should a graduate nurse be disabled before entering upon her profession, we believe it would be competent to show the income of that occupation as bearing on the question of loss of earning power, and, if so, why not in this case? "Lessened capacity to earn in any actually available occupation may be shown * * * by proper and satisfactory proof, and not left to mere conjecture," from opinion by Mr. Justice Potter in Helmstetter v. Pittsburgh Rys. Co., 243 Pa. 422, 428, 90 Atl. 208, 204. We find no error in the action of the trial judge in the admission of testimony on this branch of the case or in his instructions to the jury with reference thereto.

[8] The refusal to grant a new trial is, as we have often held, a matter within the discretion of the trial court, with which we cannot interfere except to correct a manifest abuse of discretion, which is not shown in this case.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

(261 Pa. 561)

IN RE WEBER'S ESTATE.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 11, 1918.)

1. TRUSTS \Leftrightarrow 156—EXECUTOR AS TRUSTEE OR TENANT.

Under will directing that three sons of testatrix should continue business owned by her, and pay rent of factory to other children, including two daughters, and pay existing debts of business and divide profits, a son and executor, acquiring whole interest in business, was not a trustee, but a tenant.

2. WILLS \Leftrightarrow 573(2)—CONSTRUCTION—INTERESTS OF DEVISEES.

Under will directing three sons of testatrix to continue a business owned by her, to pay rent to other children, including two daughters, and divide profits, and on its discontinuance to sell it and turn proceeds into estate, the daughters had no interest in business, but merely a right on its cessation to require payment to estate of its value at death of testatrix.

3. WILLS \Leftrightarrow 565(1)—CONSTRUCTION—"BUSINESS."

Under a will directing that testatrix's business be continued by her sons, who should pay rent, existing debts, and divide profits among other children, and proportional proceeds of any sale thereof, the word "business" was an uncertain and equivocal expression, which might mean property, or might mean simply good will.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Business.]

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Berks County.

Petition by Hattie M. Weber and another for a citation to require an executor of the estate of Anna Weber, deceased, to account for profits of decedent's business conducted by him. From a decree dismissing the petition, petitioners appeal. Appeal dismissed, and decree affirmed.

Argued before POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKE, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Cyrus G. Derr and Walter B. Freed, both of Reading, for appellants. Isaac Hlester and John B. Stevens, both of Reading, for appellee.

STEWART, J. Anna Weber, the testatrix, a widow, at the time of her death was the owner of a lot of ground in the city of Reading, on which was erected a building in which she conducted on her own behalf two distinct enterprises, one the manufacture of paper boxes, the other the manufacture of badges; she owning all the machinery employed in each. Inasmuch as the present controversy relates exclusively to the management, control, and final disposition of this item of testatrix's property, it can be understood only as we here produce so much of the will of testatrix as expresses her direction in regard thereto. Testatrix died in 1905, leaving to survive her five sons and two daughters. In the first item of the will we find this provision:

"They [the reference being to her three sons, Henry C., James A. and Daniel, as will later appear] shall collect all the debts due the factory and with the proceeds and the factory's moneys in the banks pay all the debts of the factories, and should there not be sufficient money arising from the collections of the bills and the moneys in the banks, the deficiencies shall be assumed by my sons, Harry C. Weber, James A. Weber and Daniel Weber, and should there be a balance over after making the collections and the factories' moneys in the banks, and after paying the debts of the said factories, that balance shall be equally divided among my children."

Why this provision that the three named of her five sons should assume any deficiency in the assets of the factories to meet the liabilities of the factories will later appear. In the next following item we find this direction:

"Item. I direct that the factories shall be run as follows. The upper factory shall be in charge of my son, Harry C. Weber, and the lower factory shall be in charge of my sons, James A. Weber and Daniel Weber. The profits of said factories shall be equally divided among the said three children, Harry C. Weber, James A. Weber and Daniel Weber, who shall pay a rental sum to my sons, Herman Weber and Walter Weber, each the sum of twelve dollars per month, and to my daughter, Maud E. Weber, the sum of fifteen dollars per month, until she shall marry, thereupon the said payment to my daughter, Maud E., shall cease. However, if at any time the said factories shall be idle for more than one month, then the above-mentioned rents shall not be paid during the time the factories are idle. My sons, Harry C. Weber, James A. Weber and Daniel Weber, shall each receive fifteen dollars per week for their labor out of the profits of the factories. I do hereby order and direct that the sum of fifteen dollars per week, as hereinbefore provided, shall be paid to my son, Daniel Weber, as long as he is connected with the factory or factories and not able to work in the said factory or factories on account of illness.

"I do hereby order and direct that my son, Harry C. Weber, shall have the sole management of the financial matters connected with the said factory or factories and the business thereof. All contracts to be approved of by him and all moneys to be received and deposited by him and all checks and other obligations to be signed by him only. In case of the death of my son, Harry C. Weber, then the surviving sons running the factory or factories shall decide amongst themselves who shall assume the duties of my deceased son, Harry C. Weber. If at any time my son, Harry C. Weber, shall desire to withdraw from the firm, then my sons, James A. Weber and Daniel Weber, shall have the first right to purchase the share of my son, Harry C. Weber, the amount to be determined by an honest appraisement of three disinterested persons.

"However, should any or either of my sons, Harry C. Weber, James A. Weber or Daniel Weber die, then from the date of such death the share of the profits of such deceased son or sons shall be paid unto his or their widow or widows, and if there be no such widow or widows surviving and there be children surviving, then such aforesaid share or shares of such deceased son or sons shall be paid unto his or their respective children, as the case may be; the foregoing is subject to the proviso that the aforesaid factory or factories are being run by my said mentioned sons as aforesaid or by any or either of them surviving as aforesaid and to continue as long as the factory or factories are run by the survivor or survivors of them, and also should it happen that any or either of my said three sons be not connected with the running or business of the said factory or factories at the time of his death or their death, then the aforesaid bequest of the share or profits shall not apply to the widow or children of such deceased son or sons dying not connected as aforesaid.

"If at any time my three sons, Harry C. Weber, James A. Weber or Daniel Weber, or the survivor or survivors of them, decline to continue the manufacturing business, or my said three sons are deceased, it is my will that the factory or factories shall not be sold as long as any of my other sons wish to run the factory or factories, and if my sons, Harry C. Weber, James A. Weber and Daniel Weber, decline to run the factory or factories, and if Herman Weber and Walter Weber or either of them wish to run the factory or factories, they shall pay a monthly rental sum of twelve dollars per month to each of my said sons if living, or if dead, to their widows or children of such deceased son or sons as aforesaid, and to my daughter, Maud E. Weber, a rental sum of fifteen dollars per month in the manner and period of time as heretofore provided. Should neither of my said sons desire to run the said factory or factories, I do hereby direct my hereinafter named executor to sell the said factory or factories at public or private sale for the best price obtainable, and I do hereby authorize and empower my hereinafter named executor to sign, seal, execute and acknowledge all such deed or deeds of conveyance as may be requisite and necessary for the granting and assuring the same to the purchaser or purchasers thereof in fee simple, and the proceeds of said sale shall be equally divided among my children, Herman Weber, Walter Weber, Harry C. Weber, James A. Weber, Daniel Weber, Hattie M. Moyer and Maud E. Weber, share and share alike, or their heirs, share and share alike."

The rest and residue of testatrix's estate she devised and bequeathed to her above-named children, share and share alike. Nothing in these several provisions relating to the factories gave rise to dispute or any expressed dissatisfaction. On the contrary, the disposition of the factories was acquiesced in, and the three sons appointed by the will to have them in charge and run them, accepted under the will, though under no requirement to do so, and entered into possession and control, thereby taking upon themselves the burden and duty of observing such conditions and regulations in connection therewith as directed by the will. One of the sons, Harry C., was made sole executor of the will; but it is to be kept in mind that he was charged with no duty as such executor in connection with the several factories so long as they were operated by any of the sons; it was for the sons to operate them in accordance with the directions of the will and no responsibility rested on Harry C. as executor in connection therewith. The firm, as testatrix speaks of the three sons thus associated, were to share equally in the profits and bear equally the indebtedness. There is not a suggestion in the will that testatrix's estate was to be liable for any loss or indebtedness, or to be otherwise interested in the enterprise. Harry C. later on acquired by purchase the shares or interests of his brothers, James A. and Daniel, who were associated with him in the business, with the result that the sole and exclusive management and control of the factories thereafter was in himself. Later on he purchased the shares of Walter and Maud, so that as the case then stood the only outstanding interests were those of Herman and Hattie Moyer, and of these Herman, now deceased and represented by his widow, was under the will to receive as rental $12 per month and Hattie $15 a month until her marriage. These were the parties in interest when the present proceeding was begun.

By petition filed in 1916 by Hattie M. and Mary A., widow of Herman, it was represented to the court that (1) by the terms of the will the factories, machinery, and business continued part of the estate of the testatrix; that when all the sons were unwilling to operate the same, or had died, they might be sold and the proceeds divided, and that the taking possession of the factories, etc., constituted Harry a trustee; that (2) Harry during his custody of the business and property, had tried to make the patronage and good will his own, to that end purchasing the adjoining building, connecting it with the estate's property, installing machinery therein which he called his own, adding other lines of business, blending the original business therewith, so as to make the original business difficult or impossible of discrimination, keeping bank books and bank accounts in his individual name, declaring and advertising the business as entirely his own, and recently offering the real estate for sale without the business, and generally pursuing a line of conduct calculated to transfer the good will and patronage to himself, with the intent that when the time arrives for sale there will be nothing to sell but the property and building; that (3) he is wasting and mismanaging the estate, whose interests are likely to be prejudiced by his continuance in the trust, his interest being hostile, and that, James having sold his interest, and Daniel and Herman having died, and Harry having ceased to operate the factories in accordance with the directions of the will, the latter should be sold as directed and the proceeds divided. The petition prayed (1) that, if sold, Harry be restrained from making use of the patronage and good will to avoid irreparable injury to the petitioners; (2) that Harry be removed from the executorship and trusteeship; (3) for a decree that circumstances have arisen whereby under the terms of the will the property is to be sold and proceeds divided; (4) for a decree of sale and an injunction restraining Harry from taking benefit of good will; and (5) that Harry be required to account for profits and damages.

To this petition Harry C., under rule, made answer, expressly denying every averment in the petition that charges him with a purpose in his management and control of the factories to prejudice the right and interest of the estate therein, if any such right or interest remains. He admits the main facts set out in the petition relating to the purchase by himself of an adjoining building wherein at his own cost and expense he has placed new and more improved machinery. He denies that he is at present, or has been at any time, a trustee of the factories or business therein conducted, but asserts that he holds the former as tenant under a fixed rental, and is now the sole owner and proprietor of the business carried on, not denying his liability to account for the machinery that was in the factories, appraised at $1,275, when he first entered into possession, but insisting that he is the owner of the new machinery introduced at his own cost and expense, that he is the sole owner of the business, entitled to all the profits of the business, and that the will making it optional for him to continue the business requires him to account as executor for said factories only when he has ceased to exercise his option in connection therewith.

[1-3] Certain testimony was taken which we have neither time nor space to review. Sufficient to say that it neither adds to nor detracts from the strength of either side as exhibited in petition and answer. Upon these alone the case might well have been decided. The learned judge of the orphans' court, in an opinion amply justifying his conclusion, held the case to be with the respondent, and accordingly dismissed the petition. The assignments of error on the appeal are 14 in number, the first of these presenting the real controversy, and except as this can be sustained the remaining assignments may be passed without consideration, since they stand or fall with the first, which reads as follows:

"The court erred in not construing the will of Anna Weber in accordance with the contention of the exceptants, viz. that the testatrix intended that the factories and businesses thereof should be and remain part of her estate to be operated by her sons, Harry C., James A. and Daniel, who, while operating the same, were to receive salaries and the net profits, and when none of her sons should be willing to operate the said factories and businesses in accordance with the terms of the will, the same should be sold and the proceeds of the sale equally divided among her children."

Unquestionably the whole case turns on the construction to be given the will of the testatrix. A manifest objection to the construction contended for by appellants is not only that it supplies too much in addition to what is expressed in the will, but that it gives to what is expressed a meaning much out of the ordinary, and that without apparent reason. The word "business," as here introduced and so much relied upon by appellants, while occurring twice in the will, is not there used in such connection as to show any intention thereby to indicate the extent of the gift to the three sons. The word is an uncertain and equivocal expression; it may mean property, or it may mean simply good will, depending on the connection in which it is used. As used by the testatrix in her will, it is without significance in the present controversy, since in the connection it is used it can have no reference to the subject of the gift to the three sons. Reduced to simplest terms, what is given by the will to the three sons was an option to lease upon certain expressed and definite terms, including a fixed rental, payable, not to the legal representatives of testatrix, but to certain of her children, the several factories which she was operating at the time of her death and as they then stood; that is to say, with their then present equipment. By their acceptance of the option a contract resulted, and the three sons thereby acquired possession and control of the building and the machinery therein, nothing here involved being reserved. The testatrix's entire interest passed to the lessees, who alone became responsible for all debts incurred and entitled to all profits earned. What conceivable property interest remained in the testatrix or her estate in connection with the conduct of the factories? Without any right to share in the profits, and without any liability for indebtedness thereafter incurred, the only right not parted with by her was the right upon the determination of the lease, however brought about, to a surrender of the estate and property leased. If this be the proper construction of the will, and as to this we are left in no doubt, then it must follow that so long as the sons, or any of them, are rightfully in possession of the premises, observing the terms of the contract—that is, performing those things required by the contract and abstaining from those things forbidden—they are entitled to be free from disturbance by any one.

The contention of appellants is that they, being entitled to share in the proceeds of the sale of the property when that period arrives, and as a distinct element of value that will enter into the price obtained will be what they choose to denominate the "business," as distinguished from the real estate and the machinery that passed under the gift of the three sons, have such interest as gives them standing now to complain. If the premises be admitted, perhaps the conclusion could not well be denied; but, as we have said, we find nothing in the will that even suggests a reservation of any kind in the gift to the sons, whether of business, whatever that may mean, or anything else. It follows that, when the lease shall terminate, the demands of the estate will be fully met by a surrender of the real estate and such machinery as the sons derived under the will, together, perhaps, with what, if any, has meanwhile been substituted for such as was outworn and rendered useless. It follows that appellants are without standing to complain, the lease is still in force, and we discover nothing in the manner in which it is being conducted that is in violation of any of its terms.

The appeal is dismissed, and the decree is affirmed.

(261 Pa. 599)

HUFNAGLE v. WILKES-BARRE RY. CO.
(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 11, 1918.)

1. WITNESSES §=367(1)—INTEREST.

One who has no personal interest in a pending suit is not an interested witness merely because he has a suit growing out of the same accident against both plaintiff's employer and defendant.

2. DAMAGES §=208(2)—PERSONAL INJURIES—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In action against street railway company for personal injuries, it was for jury to say on the medical testimony whether plaintiff's curvature of the spine was the natural and probable result of his occupation, or was due to the accident.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR §=730(2) — ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—SUFFICIENCY.

An assignment of error complaining of a fraction of the charge, and quoting one sentence thereof and part of another, and leaving out the remainder, was insufficient, as assignments of error must fully quote all that court said on matter as to which complaint is made, though they may aver which part thereof was objectionable.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR §=256(14)—CHARGE OF COURT—INTEREST OF WITNESSES.

Failure to explain the difference between interested and disinterested testimony is not error, where appellant remained silent when asked if there was anything further which he desired to have called to the jury's attention.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Luzerne County.

Trespass for personal injuries by Charles Hufnagle against Wilkes-Barre Railway Company. Verdict for plaintiff for $2,040, and judgment thereon, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, WALLING, and SIMPSON, JJ.

Paul Bedford, Frank A. McGuigan, and John T. Lenahan, all of Wilkes-Barre, for appellant. Abram Salsburg, Mose H. Salsburg, and E. B. Morgan, all of Wilkes-Barre, for appellee.

SIMPSON, J. Plaintiff alleged that while driving along a public highway he was injured by being run into by a car of defendant. Each party avers that the accident was caused by the careless and reckless driving of the other. The case was submitted to the jury, which rendered a verdict in plaintiff's favor, and from the judgment thereon defendant now appeals, and assigns errors in the charge of the court.

[1] The first assignment alleges error because of the denial of the fourth point of defendant, viz:

"Plaintiff's witness Courtright is an interested witness."

There were two witnesses of that name, and the point does not disclose which was referred to. Assuming that it was James Courtright, it appeared that he was a pedestrian on the highway at the time of the accident, claimed to be injured as a result of the collision, and had sued both plaintiff's employer, and the defendant. He had no interest in the present suit, and was not an interested witness, unless the existence of his two suits made him so. We do not think it did. Moreover, the trial judge had charged the jury to consider which witnesses were and which were not interested in the result of the case, and had particularly inquired of counsel whether there were any other points they desired him to mention to the jury. Defendant's counsel remained silent, and cannot now be heard to complain because the court relied on that silence.

[2] The second assignment complains because defendant's ninth point was refused, viz.:

"All the medical testimony accounts for plaintiff's curvature of the spine as the natural, probable result of his occupation and not due to the accident."

It was for the jury to say whether the medical testimony did "account" for that curvature. Even if every doctor had so said, and there was no other evidence to affect their opinion, the question was one of fact for the jury, and not of law for the court. McGlinn Distilling Co. v. Dervin, 260 Pa. 414, 108 Atl. 872. Moreover, there was evidence that before the accident plaintiff was a healthy, straight man, weighing 210 pounds; whereas, after being confined in bed for five months, as a result of the accident, he weighed but 110 pounds and had curvature of the spine. Under those facts it would have been error to affirm the point.

[3] The third assignment complains of a fraction of the charge relating to an argument of plaintiff's counsel on one of the points in the case. It quotes one sentence of the charge and part of another, leaves out a large part of what the court said on the subject, in immediate connection with that which is assigned, and is now overruled for that reason. Assignments of error must fully quote all that the court said on the subject regarding which complaint is made, but may then aver, if desired, which part thereof is objectionable. Fairness to the court below, as well as to this court, requires an enforcement of this rule.

[4] The fourth and last assignment complains that the trial judge did not carefully explain to the jury the difference between interested and disinterested testimony. He was not asked to do so; and, as pointed out above, he did caution the jury to consider which witnesses were and which were not interested. He also told them that the plaintiff and his wife were interested, and that their evidence should be carefully scanned and weighed in the light of that fact. If defendant wished additional light given to the jury, it should have so requested when asked to call the court's attention to anything omitted.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

(261 Pa. 593)

COMMONWEALTH v. CORSINO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 11, 1918.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW §776(4)—CHARGE—CHARACTER.

Where defendant admitted the killing and set up self-defense, a charge that evidence as to his good reputation as a peaceable man was not offered on theory that such a man would not commit a crime, and stating that character evidence was to be considered with the other evidence, gave defendant the full benefit of his character evidence, and was proper.

2. CRIMINAL LAW §822(13)—INSTRUCTION—SELF-DEFENSE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a trial for murder, a charge on self-defense, requiring such defense to be shown by "satisfactory proof," was not reversible error, where the charge further showed that it did not require the defense to be established beyond a reasonable doubt.

3. CRIMINAL LAW §761(3)—INSTRUCTION—ASSUMPTION OF FACT.

In trial for murder, where killing was admitted and the only defense was that of self-defense, it was not error for court to tell the jury that "the defense is self-defense."

4. WITNESSES §267, 282½—CROSS-EXAMINATION—DISCRETION OF LOWER COURT.

The extent to which a cross-examination will be allowed is largely in the discretion of the trial judge, and where a question has been fully answered his refusal to allow its repetition is not error.

5. CRIMINAL LAW §656(3)—STATEMENT OF ISSUE.

In trial for homicide, where it appeared that defendant had signed a written statement relating thereto, which was offered in evidence, it was not error for court to remark that question was whether it was read to defendant or whether he accepted it as his statement.

6. CRIMINAL LAW §636(1)—TRIAL—PRESENCE OF DEFENDANT.

It is an inherent right of a prisoner in a capital case to be present at every stage of the proceedings from his arraignment to the rendition of the verdict, and neither court nor judge can take any step affecting his rights in his absence.

7. CRIMINAL LAW §636(1)—TRIAL—ABSENCE OF DEFENDANT.

Where original indictment could not be found when jury retired, action of assistant district attorney in preparing a copy varying from the original, and of the trial judge at chambers in ordering it filed in place of original, without notice to defendant or his counsel and in his absence, which copy was given to jury, was reversible error.

8. WITNESSES §227—INTERPRETER—OATH.

An interpreter is a witness and should be sworn.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Witness.]

9. CRIMINAL LAW §1158(4)—INTERPRETER—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Whether testimony given in a foreign language was correctly interpreted is a question of fact with which an appellate court will not interfere, except in case of manifest error.

Appeal from Court of Oyer and Terminer, Luzerne County.

Angelo Corsino was convicted of murder in the first degree, on which sentence of death was passed, and he appeals. Reversed, and a venire facias de novo awarded.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHZISER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

W. Alfred Valentine, of Wilkes-Barre, and Frank L. Pinola and William H. Gillespie, both of Pittston, for appellant. Frank P. Slattery, Dist. Atty., and John H. Dando and A. L. Turner, Asst. Dist. Attys., all of Wilkes-Barre, for the Commonwealth.

WALLING, J. [1] The defendant, Angelo Corsino, was convicted of murder of the first degree for the killing of Augustino Shendra. The firing of the fatal shot was admitted and defendant interposed self-defense. Evidence was offered tending to establish his good reputation as a peaceable man, and it is urged that the trial judge erred in his charge upon that question. He told the jury in brief that such evidence was not offered on the theory that a man of good reputation would not commit a crime, for frequently such a man has become involved in crimes that belied his reputation. He then explained the difference between character and reputation and said:

"Evidence of reputation for good character is substantive evidence, and is to be considered with the other evidence in the case. Sometimes it is the only evidence available to a defendant, and therefore it has been said in some instances it may of itself create a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt. Such evidence is applicable as well to the degree of the crime as to the general question of guilt under the entire indictment. It may, therefore, where the proof of guilt has been established, lead the jury to doubt whether a first degree crime was committed, and thus bring the jury to a verdict of second degree, or even manslaughter, and where it continues in the mind as to guilt in any degree, or of any crime, it should lead to general acquittal."

He also affirmed without qualification defendant's twelfth and thirteenth points, where the law on this branch of the case is stated fully and as favorably to defendant as can be found in any of the authorities. Defendant had the full benefit of his character defense, and there is no error in the general charge as to that; hence the rule that misstatement of the law in the charge cannot be cured by answers to points does not apply. But on the question of adequacy the points and answers are a part of the charge, and it is not necessary to repeat elsewhere principles fully stated in requests that are granted.

[2, 3] We find no substantial merit in the criticism of the charge as to self-defense. True, the judge did say it should be established by satisfactory proof, but thereafter clearly showed that he did not thereby mean evidence beyond a reasonable doubt; for he affirmed defendant's point that:

"The burden of proving self-defense is not placed heavily upon one accused of taking life. Sacred as is human life, the defendant is not bound to show beyond all doubt that he was compelled to take it, but is humanely permitted to satisfy the jury by a fair preponderance of the testimony that he killed under circumstances justifying his belief that his own life would not otherwise have been saved"

—and then said:

"And that brings to my mind that I failed to refer, in my general charge, to the measure of proof which is required of the defendant who sets up the defense of self-defense"

—and fully explained the correct rule and told the jury that such defense need not be established beyond a reasonable doubt, but by what is called in law the fair preponderance or weight of the evidence. He also instructed the jury that if, on the whole case, they had a reasonable doubt as to defendant's guilt they should acquit him. While the term "satisfactory proof" was not happily chosen, we are sure that, taking all the judge said, the jury could not have understood him to mean by that term proof beyond a reasonable doubt. It was not error to tell the jury that "the defense is self-defense," for there was no other. A man who, standing near another, intentionally fires at him with a revolver, and with such deadly aim as to pierce his heart, cannot escape by testifying that he did not intend to kill him; but such statement may be competent on the question of the degree of the crime.

[4, 5] The extent to which a cross-examination will be allowed is quite largely committed to the discretion of the trial judge; and, where a question has been fully answered, his refusal to allow its repetition is not error. On the day following the homicide, the defendant had signed a written statement relating thereto, which was offered in evidence, and it was not error for the trial judge to remark that:

"The question is whether it was read to the prisoner, or whether the prisoner accepted it as his statement. That is the question."

[6, 7] As the jury retired to consider the case, the indictment could not be found; neither could the district attorney, who had inadvertently carried it away; so his assistant prepared a copy which the trial judge at chambers ordered filed in place of the original until the latter could be found. The copy was then given to the jury. This order was made without notice to defendant or his counsel, and in their absence. The names of 10 of the commonwealth's witnesses were indorsed on the back of the original indictment, while the copy contained but one, and defendant's plea of "not guilty" entered on the original was omitted from the copy; aside from this they were alike. It is the inherent right of the prisoner in a capital case to be present at every stage of the proceedings from the arraignment to the rendition of the verdict. Neither court nor judge can take any step affecting his right in his absence. See Sadler's Criminal Procedure, p. 412; also 10 R. C. L. pp. 90, 91. "It is better that this case should be tried a third time than that such a precedent should be established." Per opinion of President Judge Rice in Commonwealth of Penna. v. House, 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 92. When, during a trial, it becomes necessary to amend an indictment, or substitute a copy, the application therefor should be made in open court in presence of the defendant and on notice to his counsel that all rights may be safeguarded. The right of the court to permit a copy to be filed in place of the original indictment is not the question. It may be that no harm was done defendant; the same might be said of answering questions propounded by jurors, giving them additional instructions or taking their verdict, and yet no one would urge that such could be done in the absence of defendant. The law so jealously guards the prisoner's rights, when on trial for life, that it will not tolerate any false step that might result to his prejudice, even when takgranted a new trial; the sixth assignment of error relating thereto is well taken.

[8] The evidence of some witnesses on each side, unable to speak English, was taken through Mrs. Mary Sardoni, an Italian interpreter. As a reason for a new trial it was urged that she had not been properly sworn. An interpreter is a witness and should be sworn. See Wharton's Criminal Evidence (10th Ed.) § 449; 1 Thompson on Trials (2d Ed.) § 366; 7 Encyclopedia of Evidence, p. 657. Mrs. Sardoni had not been appointed or qualified as interpreter under the act of May 8, 1918 (P. L. 170), but had acted as such in the court below for 25 years, and whether properly sworn, or, if not, whether defendant can avail himself of that fact after having used her as his own interpreter and after verdict, are questions not necessary now to determine. As the case goes back for a new trial, that objection can be eliminated by administering an oath to the interpreter, a precaution that would not be amiss in any case. The court below, after a careful investigation, found in effect that the testimony had been interpreted with substantial accuracy, so the complaint as to that is without merit.

[9] Whether testimony given in a foreign language was correctly interpreted is a question of fact, with which an appellate court will not interfere, except in case of manifest error.

The sixth assignment of error is sustained, and thereupon the judgment is reversed, and a venire facias de novo awarded.

(261 Pa. 589)

CORONA COAL & COKE CO. v. DICKINSON et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 11, 1918.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS § 70(3) — COAL LEASE—LIABILITY FOR MINIMUM ROYALTY.

Under lease of coal seam requiring immediate mining and payment of a minimum royalty until all merchantable and workable coal should be exhausted, the fact that vein had become thinner and more difficult to work, and that coal was of less value, did not excuse lessee from duty to pay minimum royalty.

2. CONTRACTS § 808(1)—BREACH—EXCUSE.

Inconvenience or cost making compliance a hardship cannot excuse a party from performance of absolute unqualified undertaking to do a thing that is possible and lawful.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT § 189—LIABILITY OF LESSEE—CHANGE IN PROPERTY.

As a general rule a lessee is not relieved from liability by subsequent developments or changes in the property.

4. MINES AND MINERALS § 70(1) — COAL LEASE — ACCEPTANCE OF ROYALTIES — WAIVER.

Under coal lease requiring lessee's payment of minimum royalty, the lessor's acceptance of the royalty on the amount actually mined, which was less than the minimum royalty, was not a

U. WORDS AND PHRASES—WAIVER.

Mere delay of suit or neglect to rigorously exact money is not evidence of waiver.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Waiver.]

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Clearfield County.

Replevin by the Corona Coal & Coke Company against Margaret A. Dickinson and others for properties seized by landlord's warrant. From a judgment on a verdict for defendants for $4,662.68, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Roland D. Swoope, of Clearfield, for appellant. A. R. Chase, of Clearfield, for appellees.

WALLING, J. This is an action of replevin for property seized by landlord's warrant for royalties on a coal lease. In 1908 defendants, as owners of a tract of 250 acres of land in Clearfield county, made a lease to plaintiff of a certain vein of coal therein, known as B seam, which provides, inter alia:

"Third. The lessee shall proceed at once to open and develop said coal and shall commence shipping coal on or before the 1st day of April, A. D. 1909, and shall ship during the year, to be computed from said date, not less than 20,000 gross tons of coal, and the next following year 20,000 gross tons, and each and every year thereafter during the continuance of this lease not less than 25,000 gross tons, until all of the merchantable and workable coal in said seam, in or under the above-described lands, shall be exhausted, and in default thereof the said lessee agrees to pay to the said lessors the royalty on said minimum amount of coal agreed to be mined at the aforesaid rate, the same to be payable at the end of each period of three (3) months, subject, however, to a proportionate deduction in said minimum amount of coal agreed to be mined as aforesaid when a general labor strike or other causes beyond the control of said lessee shall prevent mining operations. It is understood that if rent or royalty shall be advanced and paid on the minimum quantity for coal not mined, the lessee shall have the right to mine the coal thus paid for, next two succeeding years, without again paying royalty therefor."

And also:

"Ninth. It is covenanted and agreed that this lease shall continue until all the merchantable and workable coal in said B seam or vein has been mined, as hereinbefore provided."

The plaintiff (lessee) took possession of the property and proceeded to mine and remove the coal, and for the first five years paid the defendants (lessors) the full minimum royalty, although that was slightly more than for the amount of coal actually mined. As the operation extended, the vein became thinner and the coal more dirty, which added to the work of its removal and to the difficulty of mining the stipulated minimum quantity. Of this condition plaintiff made repeated complaints to defendants, and, after the five years, in making settlements paid the royalty only on the amounts actually mined, which was much less than the minimum. Defendants retained the payments, but never agreed to treat them as in full, or to waive any rights under the lease, or to modify any of its provisions. This continued for about three years, when defendants issued the warrant in question to collect the difference between the minimum royalty and the amount actually paid, which amounted to $4,662.63; then the lessee brought this replevin. The trial court held that defendants were within their rights and directed a verdict in their favor. Plaintiff appealed.

[1] We find nothing that calls for reversal. Plaintiff is still mining the vein of coal, and has never surrendered the lease, nor offered to do so, and there is yet therein a large amount of merchantable workable coal, as about one-half of the tract has not been mined. There is no guaranty in the lease as to the thickness of the vein or quality of the coal. During but two months of the entire time have mining operations on the premises ceased, and for them plaintiff has received credit. We agree with the court below that so long as the mine is in operation the minimum royalty must be paid, and that the fact of the vein being lighter in some places, or of the coal containing an unusual amount of dirt, rendering it difficult to secure miners to work therein, is no defense. The parties did not stipulate as to those contingencies. By the terms of the lease the only available excuse is a general labor strike or other cause beyond the control of the lessee which prevents mining operations, and there has been no such cause. There is no allegation that it is not practical to mine the coal as it is; in fact, it is being mined, and the conditions complained of do not prevent it. No fraud is alleged, and there is no ambiguity in the contract.

[2-4] Had the vein turned out richer than expected, it would have been plaintiff's gain; that it turned out poorer is its loss, but does not excuse performance of the contract. The lessors could not repudiate it because of the increase in value of unmined coal, neither can the lessee because of the increased difficulty in or expense of mining it. "Inconvenience, or the cost of compliance, though they might make compliance a hardship, cannot excuse a party from the performance of an absolute and unqualified undertaking to do a thing that is possible and lawful. Parties sui juris bind themselves by their lawful contracts, and courts cannot alter them because they work a hardship. The rights of the parties must be measured by the contract which they themselves made. A contract is not invalid, nor is the obligor therein in any manner discharged from its binding effect, because it turns out to be difficult or burdensome to perform." 6 R. C.

L. p. 997. And see Timlin v. Brown, 158 Pa. 606, 28 Atl. 236; Lehigh Valley Coal Co. v. Everhart, 206 Pa. 118, 55 Atl. 864; Steele v. Maher, 38 Pa. Super. Ct. 183; Shafer v. Senseman, 125 Pa. 310, 17 Atl. 350. "As a general rule a lessee is not relieved from liability by subsequent developments or changes in the property." 18 R. C. L. § 99, p. 1192. The lessors' acceptance of the royalty on the amount actually mined was not a waiver of the balance, nor did it constitute an estoppel. Tustin v. Philadelphia & Reading C. & I. Co., 250 Pa. 425, 95 Atl. 595; Hillside Coal & Iron Co. v. Sterrick Creek Coal Co., 239 Pa. 359, 86 Atl. 865; Powell v. Burroughs, 54 Pa. 329.

[5] A debtor cannot discharge himself of a clear legal liability for a fixed amount by paying a part of it. Mere delay of suit or neglect to rigorously exact money is not evidence of waiver. Atkinson, Assignee, v. Walton, 162 Pa. 219, 222, 29 Atl. 898. And see Teufel v. Rowan, 179 Pa. 408, 36 Atl. 224.

There is no ambiguity in the lease; hence the fact that the lessee paid the entire minimum royalty for the first five years, and thereafter declined to do so, is not important as tending to show the parties' own construction of the contract. Plaintiff's various offers of evidence as to the dirty condition of the coal, the difficulty of securing miners by reason thereof, etc., if admitted, would have constituted no defense to the lessors' claim for the minimum royalty; therefore their rejection was not error. There is here an abundance of unmined workable coal of merchantable quality, and no question as to the exhaustion of the vein or of the lessee's inability to mine the minimum amount by reason thereof; hence the authorities cited as to that do not apply.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

(261 Pa. 554)

BONE v. DETROIT NAT. FIRE INS. CO.
(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 3, 1918.)

1. INSURANCE — 146(3) — FIRE INSURANCE — CONSTRUCTION OF POLICY.

Where the terms of a policy are capable of two meanings, or where the true meaning is doubtful, the law favors such construction as will protect the insured, and not such a construction as will avoid the policy.

2. INSURANCE — 328(3) — FIRE INSURANCE — "PREMISES."

Fire insurance policy, covering a hotel and the goods therein, with riders forbidding keeping of over 50 gallons of gasoline on premises, to be contained in tank 5 feet from any building, and more than one automobile on premises, was not violated by keeping over 100 gallons 200 feet from hotel, or by keeping two automobiles in barn 400 feet away, as "premises" did not include land, or the barn which was not insured.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Premises.]

3. INSURANCE \S 328(13)—FIRE INSURANCE—"CHANGE OF POSSESSION"—POSSESSION UNDER PROCESS.

Under fire insurance policy, in terms void on any change in interest, title, or possession, by legal process, act of insured, etc., sheriff's levy on insured hotel and goods, in possession of tenant, subject to levy, was not a change of possession, avoiding the policy.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Change.]

4. INSURANCE \S 328(13)—OUSTER OF TENANT—FIERI FACIAS.

A fieri facias is not such a writ as, ex necessitate, would immediately oust a tenant from his possession or right of possession, within a fire policy stipulating as to effect of change of title or possession of the property.

5. EVIDENCE \S 155(3)—VALUE OF PROPERTY.

In action on policy covering hotel and goods, wherein insured offered evidence as to offers he had had for the premises, on the question of property's market value, the defendant's evidence as to its market value was admissible.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Crawford County.

Assumpsit in a fire insurance policy by Max Bone and Max Bone, to use of D. E. Kelley, trustee, against the Detroit National Fire Insurance Company. Verdict for plaintiff for $1,697.25, and defendant and plaintiff both appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WAL-LING, JJ.

Albert L. Thomas, of Meadville, for plaintiff. Frank J. Thomas, of Meadville, for defendant.

MOSCHZISKER, J. The present suit was instituted upon two policies of insurance issued by defendant company, in certain proportions, upon "the four-story, frame, slate-roofed building occupied as a hotel, on Main street, * * * Cambridge Springs, Pa.," and the "goods" contained therein. Plaintiff, owner of the property in question, rented it to his son, Joe Bone; the latter had as a business partner, in the possession and management of the hotel, one J. M. Manheimer. This hotel was located upon a 40-acre tract of land, and 400 feet distant from the site of the insured building there was a barn, where Bone & Manheimer kept two automobiles, employed in the conduct of their business, a gasoline tank, with a capacity of 400 gallons, was located about midway between the barn and hotel, gasoline therefrom was used to supply these automobiles, and from time to time small quantities were taken to the hotel building; but neither the location of the tank nor this use of its contents was in any way connected with the fire which caused the loss. Several judgments were entered against plaintiff, and August 9, 1915, executions were placed in the hands of the sheriff, who, August 10, 1915, levied upon the insured premises and personal property; within a few hours thereafter, a fire was discovered in the linen closet on the third floor of the hotel, which resulted in the destruction of the building and part of its furnishings. Plaintiff recovered a verdict, upon which judgment was entered; both sides have appealed. Defendant's paper book shows but three "questions involved"; all of these relate to alleged breaches of warranties, any one of which, appellant claims, is sufficient to avoid the contracts in suit.

[1, 2] The premises insured are described in the policies as hereinbefore stated. In an attached printed rider, marked "dwelling and barn form," the following clause among others, appears:

"Not to exceed fifty gallons of gasoline * * * shall be kept on the premises, * * * to be contained in an air-tight metal tank, stored underground and located at least five feet from any building herein insured. All gasoline shall be conveyed to building by means of a return draining pump."

Defendant contends the provision just quoted was violated by "keeping more than 100 gallons of gasoline in a tank, above ground, located 200 feet from the insured building." The above-mentioned rider also contains a stipulation that "not more than one automobile using gasoline shall be stored or kept on the premises," and defendant contends this was violated by keeping two such automobiles in the barn, 400 feet from the insured building.

In disposing of the points to which we have just called attention, the learned court below correctly states:

"Where the terms of a policy are capable of two meanings, or the true meaning is left in doubt, the law favors such construction * * * as will protect the insured, * * * and does not lend a willing ear to an interpretation that will avoid the policy. * * * Cases might be multiplied in favor of the construction that [the term] 'premises,' as used in the policy, does not include the land included in the farm upon which the hotel stood. * * * To adopt the contention of * * * defendant that the automobiles and gasoline tank * * * were on the '[insured] premises,' would be to hold that any point on the forty-acre farm operated with the hotel would be on the 'premises,' within the meaning of the policy. * * * If the insurance company intended the 'premises' to include a distance of 200 to 400 feet from the hotel, it could very easily have said so, and very likely would have done so. * * * The fact that the stipulations concerning the tank and automobiles appear in the rider, which is a printed form intended for 'dwelling and barn,' and so specifies, accounts in our judgment for the stipulation as to automobiles; naturally, an automobile would be stored or kept in or about a barn, and not * * * in or about an hotel."

We concur with the construction put upon the policies by the court below, and agree with what is said in plaintiff's paper book, viz.:

"The risk assumed was the hotel; that is the only thing described, and, when this word 'premises' is used in the policy, it refers to the hotel building, not the land. No gasoline was kept in the hotel building, and it is clear that the demands of the hotel for gasoline were not such as to require a storage tank underground, and that the gasoline be 'conveyed to the building by means of a return draining pump.' This [provision] referred to, and was intended to refer to, the barn, in case one was insured; the rider is general, and, no barn being insured, * * * that clause is inoperative" in the present instance. Grandin v. Rochester German Ins. Co., 107 Pa. 23, 37.

While, owing to differences in the facts involved, no authority is called to our attention which precisely rules the case at bar, yet the following may be cited as consistent with, and to some degree supporting, the conclusions reached on the points which we have been discussing. Allemania Fire Ins. Co. v. Pittsburgh Exposition Society, 8 Sadler, 424, 443, 11 Atl. 572; Teutonia Fire Ins. Co. v. Mund, 102 Pa. 89, 93, 94; Central Market Street Co. v. North British & M. Ins. Co., 245 Pa. 272, 276, 91 Atl. 662; Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Shearman, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 343, 50 S. W. 598, 599; Carlin v. Western Assurance Co., 57 Md. 515, 529, 40 Am. St. Rep. 440; N. W. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Germania Fire Ins. Co., 40 Wis. 446, 452; Sperry v. Ins. Co. of N. A. (C. O.) 22 Fed. 516, 517.

[3, 4] The last question involved in defendant's appeal relates to the condition that:

"This entire policy * * * shall be void * * * if any change, other than by the death of the insured, take place in the interest (except change of occupancy without increase of hazard), title, or possession of the subject of insurance, * * * whether by legal process or judgment or by voluntary act of the insured, or otherwise."

Defendant contends that the levy by the sheriff upon the insured "premises" and "goods," in connection with what was done by the officer at the time, constitutes such a change of possession as avoids the policies. In overruling this contention, the court below says:

"As to change of possession, when the facts are in dispute it is * * * a question for the jury. It is undisputed that Manheimer was a tenant under Max Bone [plaintiff]; his possession was the possession of the owner. The jury specially found that Manheimer remained in possession of the hotel after the sheriff's levy and until the time of the fire, as tenant. We think this finding is sustained by the evidence and settled adversely to defendant company its contention that the sheriff's conduct amounted to a dispossession of plaintiff's tenants; but, if the finding of the jury on this point were lacking the support of sufficient evidence, we are not prepared to assent to defendant's contention that the sheriff's levy * * * would effectuate such a change of possession as to avoid the policy."

We agree with both positions taken by the court below. The fact found by the jury, that at least one of plaintiff's tenants continued in possession of the insured property after the sheriff came upon the premises, subject, of course, to the latter's levy, prevents the application of the provision of the contract, as to change of possession, sought to be enforced by defendant. Then, again, a fiat facias is not such a writ as, ex necessitate, would immediately oust the tenants from their possession or right of possession. See the following relevant, if not ruling, authorities: Commonwealth Ins. Co. v. Berger, 42 Pa. 285, 292, 82 Am. Dec. 504; Collins v. London Assurance Corporation, 165 Pa. 298, 306, 30 Atl. 924; Marcello v. Concordia Fire Ins. Co., 234 Pa. 31, 84, et seq., 82 Atl. 1090, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 366; Stainer v. Royal Ins. Co., 13 Pa. Super. Ct. 25, 41.

[5] Plaintiff is dissatisfied with the amount of the verdict, and for that reason also has appealed, alleging the trial judge erred when he admitted certain evidence as to the market value of the insured real estate. In disposing of this complaint, the court below states:

"Our reply * * * does not depend upon any refined reasoning as to whether, under the terms of the policy, the market value of the property insured has any relation to the amount of the insurance company's liability; it would rather depend on whether the plaintiff had not made [such value relevant] by introducing it into the case. Suppose plaintiff had relied entirely upon proof of market value, and offered no evidence as to cost of reproducing the hotel, it certainly would not be contended that defendant could not accept the issue of value * * * relied upon. * * * Plaintiff having relied upon two measures of value as fixing defendant's liability, defendant could meet the case presented only by offering like evidence; hence, in our opinion, defendant was entitled to prove market value. See Morris v. Travis, 7 Serg. & R. 220 [223]. * * * The evidence tendered by plaintiff was as to offers he had had for the insured property, * * * but the effect was to prove market value. We are also of opinion, the bona fides of such offers being a proper inquiry for the jury, that defendant's evidence as to * * * value would assist the jury in determining whether to believe such offers [to buy actually] had been made, and, if so, whether they were in good faith."

See Hamilton v. Hastings, 172 Pa. 308, 317, 34 Atl. 43; and opinion by Rice, P. J., in Winters v. Schmitz, 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 496, 505.

We may add, there is no specification of error attacking the manner in which the measure of damages was submitted to the jury; the sole complaint being as to the admission of testimony. Under the circumstances attending the trial of this case, we see no reversible error in the rulings called to our attention by plaintiff's assignment; and, since we have stated already a like view regarding defendant's assignments, they are all overruled.

The judgment is affirmed.

(361 Pa. 532)

RANSLEY v. KENSINGTON WORKINGMEN'S BLDG. ASS'N, NO. 2.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 8, 1918.)

JUDICIAL SALES—29—DEFAULT OF BIDDER—ACTION FOR DIFFERENCE BETWEEN BIDS ON FIRST AND SECOND SALE—AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENSE.

In action by sheriff, to use of third mortgagee, to recover from defaulting bidder difference between original bid and bid at resale, affidavit of defense by defendant, second mortgagee and successful bidder at both sales, denying its appropriation of stocks to reduction of its mortgage debt, and alleging that plaintiff was actual owner of mortgaged premises, which, if true, would entitle defendant to set off taxes, etc., held sufficient.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Assumpsit by Harry C. Ransley, High Sheriff of the County of Philadelphia, to the use of Robert F. Stetler, against the Kensington Workingmen's Building Association, No. 2, to recover from defendant, as a defaulting bidder at a sheriff's sale, the difference between the original bid and the bid at the resale. From an order dismissing plaintiff's rule for judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense, plaintiff appeals. Appeal dismissed.

The facts appear from the following opinion by Rogers, J., in the common pleas:

This is a rule for judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense. Suit was brought for the recovery of money which the use plaintiff claims to have lost by reason of defendant's failure to settle for several properties in accordance with bids made by it at sheriff's sales had under judgments upon bonds accompanying second mortgages held by defendant. Plaintiff is a subsequent mortgagee, and claims to have lost the sum of $1,614.94, being the difference between defendant's first and second bids. The first sale took place January 2, 1917, the down money being $50; the second sale took place February 5, 1917, and the down money was $250.

On April 10, 1917, defendant canceled the shares of stock pledged to it as security for the payment of the loans and the fulfillment of all conditions set forth in the bonds and mortgages, and appropriated the value thereof to the payment of certain claims specifically pleaded. On June 22, 1917, Sherwood presented to defendant an assignment of the stock in question from John W. Healy, who held the same by assignment dated July 1, 1912, from Hayden, the original owner. Paragraph 7 of the amended statement of claim is as follows:

"7. The 40 shares of stock in the defendant corporation, which were assigned as collateral security for mortgage loans by the defendant on said properties, were duly assigned to the use plaintiff on December 21, 1914. At the time of the sheriff's sale of January 2, 1917, the surrender value of each of said shares was $39.90, and the value of each set of 10 shares, pledged as collateral security with each of said mortgages, was $500, which said shares were canceled by the defendant and the value thereof applied on account of its judgments."

To which defendant answered:

"7. Defendant, by way of answer to the seventh paragraph of plaintiff's amended statement, avers that the said Lewis S. Hayden made monthly contributions covering dues, interest, premium, etc., and that he continued to make said payments until on or about the 1st day of July, 1913, when the said Lewis S. Hayden duly assigned the four certificates, comprising 10 shares each, to John W. Healy, subject to the prior rights of the association. That the said John W. Healy, from the time of said transfer until the 10th day of April, 1917, was the legal holder of said 40 shares of stock on the books of the defendant association, and that said 40 shares had never been transferred or assigned to any one on the books of the association, and that no application for a transfer or an assignment had been made by any one until the 22d day of June, 1917, at which time Robert E. Lamberton, Esq., attorney for Norman S. Sherwood, presented to this deponent, secretary of the defendant association, a supposed assignment of stock, purporting to assign 40 shares of stock, from one John W. Healy to Robert F. Stetler, dated the 31st day of December, 1914. Defendant denies that said 40 shares of stock were duly assigned to the use plaintiff on the 31st day of December, 1914. He further avers that the said Robert F. Stetler, use plaintiff herein, was not the holder of the title to said premises hereinbefore described, and was not the holder of the assignment of said mortgage as aforesaid, until the 3d day of November, 1916, about one month after the foreclosure proceedings had been started; therefore the use plaintiff herein had absolutely no interest in said properties or mortgage at the time of said supposed assignment, to wit, the 31st day of December, 1914. Defendant further denies that said 40 shares of stock were canceled and applied on account of the judgments obtained on the four bonds, but, on the contrary, avers that the said 40 shares of stock were not canceled until the 10th day of April, 1917, and the stock was appropriated by the association in cancellation of the indebtedness as hereinafter set forth."

The detailed schedules and the subsequent averments in the amended affidavit of defense show distributions and payments which required the use of the stock and its value in such manner as to leave nothing applicable to plaintiff's claim, even if valid. That raises a question of fact for a jury. The affidavit denied that the stock had been appropriated in reduction of the mortgage debts. Whether the building and loan association appropriated the monthly payment on account of the stock in reduction of the mortgage debts owing by the person who owned the property and whether such appropriations were applied as the payments were made or before the sheriff's sale took place are questions of fact to be determined by a jury. If the stock was not appropriated by defendant, there would be no balance coming to the third mortgagee under the first sale.

Paragraph 2 of the amended affidavit of defense is as follows:

"Defendant further avers that said mortgage created by the said Anne H. Blakely was without consideration; that no money had been advanced by the said Norman S. Sherwood on account of said mortgage; that it was created at the sole instance, request, and direction of said Norman S. Sherwood; that at no time since its creation has one penny of interest been paid as provided in said mortgage; that it was created for the sole and exclusive purpose of protecting the said Norman S. Sherwood from possible creditors, and therefore was a fraud upon them and illegal; that the said Robert F. Stetler, holder of the assignment as aforesaid, was and is not a holder for value of said mortgage or the assignments thereof; that he has no interest therein, and that he advanced no money on account of said mortgage or assignment, and he was a mere naked holder of the title to said mortgage and the assignment thereof for the absolute use and benefit of his employer, the said Norman S. Sherwood. Defendant further avers that, after the creation of said mortgage, the said Anne H. Blakely, at the special instance and request of the said Norman S. Sherwood, transferred the four properties hereinbefore more particularly described on the 28th day of December, 1915, to R. Le Roy Dengler, as will more fully and at large appear by reference to Deed Book J. M. H., No. 76, page 559; that the said R. Le Roy Dengler is a bell boy or night clerk at the Little Hotel, 225 South Broad street; that he is a straw man for the said Norman S. Sherwood, and was used for that purpose in this particular matter, and therefore was holding title to said premises for the sole use, benefit, and enjoyment of the said Norman S. Sherwood. Wherefore title to said premises and said mortgage is now in Norman S. Sherwood."

If it is true that Sherwood owned the property and the mortgage, and that the mortgage merged, Sherwood could not recover as mortgagee; he could only recover as real owner. If he did not pay the taxes and water rents, as set forth in the schedules of distribution in the amended affidavit of defense, and sued as real owner, defendant would have the right to set off the amount of taxes, water rents, et cetera, as set forth in the affidavit of defense. The averments as to the increase of deposit to be paid at the second sale also raise a question of fact which requires submission of the case to a jury.

For these reasons the rule for judgment is discharged.

The lower court dismissed plaintiff's rule for judgment. Plaintiff appealed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Robert E. Lamberton, of Philadelphia, for appellant. J. R. Wilson, of Philadelphia, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is dismissed, on the opinion of the learned judge below discharging the rule for judgment.

(361 Pa. 580)

KENNEDY et al. v. E. W. ROTHROCK CO., Inc.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 11, 1918.)

1. CONTRACTS ¶214—PAYMENT OF NOTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Where a corporation has agreed to pay notes out of money realized from sale of its capital stock for cash, it is bound to pay notes after sale of enough stock to pay them in full, either for cash or for notes discounted for cash; the contract distinguishing stock sold for cash from that issued in exchange.

2. CONTRACTS ¶322(3)—PAYMENT OF NOTES—EVIDENCE—DEFAULT.

In action against corporation on its notes and written contract, evidence held to show a breach of contract.

3. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ¶54(2)—LOAN OF CREDIT—DISPOSITION OF ASSETS.

One contracting to lend his credit to another is not prohibited from transferring or disposing of his property, unless he has so agreed, at least where it does not appear that the transfer was made to avoid the obligation.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶1064(1)—CHARGE OF COURT—REVERSIBLE ERROR.

Alleged inconsistency in a charge was no ground for reversal, where it appeared that it did defendant no harm.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶230—INCONSISTENT CHARGE—REVERSIBLE ERROR—FAILURE TO OBJECT.

Alleged inconsistency in charge was no ground for reversal, where defendant's counsel, when court inquired of counsel at end of charge whether there was anything else he desired to have said to jury, did not then point out alleged inconsistency.

6. JUDGMENT ¶263(8)—MOTION IN ARREST OF JUDGMENT—MISJOINDER OF ACTIONS.

Where affidavit of defense was filed, plea in abatement was entered, and general issue was pleaded, together with a special plea, without complaint of any misjoinder of actions, it was too late after verdict to complain of such misjoinder on motion in arrest of judgment, especially where it did not appear that any misjoinder prejudiced appellant.

7. PLEADING ¶433(7)—DECLARATION—AMENDMENT TO AGREE WITH VERDICT.

Where declaration in action on contract asked interest only from December 1, 1915, though on most of the claims in suit it was actually due from December 4, 1914, and special verdict allowed it from latter date, declaration might be treated as amended to agree with judgment on the verdict.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶589—STATEMENT OF QUESTIONS INVOLVED—REVIEW.

Where appellant's statements of "questions involved" made no reference to the matter of interest recovered against him, that matter was not properly before Supreme Court on appeal, and need not be considered.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Blair County.

Assumpsit on notes and written contracts by E. J. Kennedy and J. S. Ginter, cashier of the Farmers' & Merchants' National Bank, of Tyrone, Pa., now for use of E. J. Kennedy, against the E. W. Rothrock Company, Incorporated, a Delaware corporation. Verdict for plaintiffs for $4,712.90, and judgment thereon, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Wm. L. Pascoe and Albert G. Pascoe, both of Tyrone, for appellants. J. F. Sullivan, of Altoona, and Richard H. Gilbert, of Tyrone, for appellees.

MOSCHZISKER, J. By written agreement of December 8, 1914, E. W. Rothrock Company, a Pennsylvania corporation, sold all its capital stock and property to "E. W. Rothrock Company, Incorporated," a new (Delaware) corporation, for $26,800, payable in 268 shares of stock of the latter and the assumption of the debts of the former company in the amount of $31,204.43, such stock to be transferred as follows: One hundred shares of preferred stock of the Pennsylvania corporation in exchange for the same number of shares of like stock of the Delaware corporation, each of the par value of $100, and, in addition, 168 shares of the common stock of the latter to be divided pro rata among the holders of the common stock of the former. The new corporation was capitalized at $100,000 and the old at $15,000.

Subsequent to the arrangement just outlined, but on the same day, E. W. Rothrock Company, Incorporated—hereinafter called the Delaware company—entered into a written agreement with plaintiff, E. J. Kennedy, who held 35 shares of the capital stock of the Pennsylvania company, and was about to receive, in exchange, the same number of shares of preferred stock of the new corporation, whereby it was agreed (a) that the Delaware company would purchase these 35 shares for $3,500, payable in seven notes of $500 each, dated December 4, 1914, with interest, the first maturing one month thereafter, and one falling due each succeeding month; (b) that the Delaware company would give its notes for $9,100, payable at such times as could be arranged with the then holders of $9,100 in notes of the Pennsylvania company, upon which Kennedy was either accommodation maker or indorser, as new obligations to lift these old ones; (c) that he (Kennedy) would "use his best endeavors to have the present owners of the $9,100 notes exchange the same and accept in payment thereof the notes of [the Delaware company]," and that he would "indorse and renew his indorsements of all notes from time to time, so long as the contract and agreement [was] fairly carried out by the [Delaware company]"; (d) that the Delaware company would pay the aforesaid $3,500 of notes given for Kennedy's stock, and the obligations for $9,100, upon which he was to become indorser, "out of the money realized from the sales of its capital stock for cash," excluding the before-mentioned 268 shares, and 50 in addition, specially set aside for certain designated purposes; (e) that such money would be applied as follows: "The first $6,000 upon account of the outstanding bills of said Pennsylvania corporation, the next $1,000 half on said $3,500 and half on said $9,100 notes to said E. J. Kennedy; the next $1,000 on account of such bills; the next $1,000 half and half on said E. J. Kennedy notes as aforesaid, etc.," until all of the notes were fully paid.

In pursuance of this last-mentioned agreement, the Delaware company delivered seven notes of $500 each to plaintiff for his stock, and the latter procured the holders of the old notes for $9,100 to take in lieu thereof like obligations of the new corporation; Kennedy thereafter signed, and, from time to time, renewed his signature upon the new notes for $9,100, until the banks refused further to accept him either as maker or indorser. Finally, suit for $1,000 having been brought on one of the latter obligations, judgment obtained, and execution issued, Kennedy was compelled to pay that amount, with interest and costs, such note having been signed by him jointly with defendant corporation, he acting as an accommodation maker. After its payment, this obligation was duly assigned to plaintiff. The first of the seven notes was paid, but those subsequently maturing were not. Kennedy brought this action of assumpsit against the Delaware company to recover the $3,000 yet due on these obligations, and in addition, claimed the $1,000 which he had paid as accommodation maker, $342.50 due him on a check, and $300 for rent of premises occupied by defendant. All these items were sued for by Kennedy as legal plaintiff, except the one of $1,000, which he claimed as use plaintiff.

Defendant denied liability on the six $500 notes upon the ground that plaintiff, in February, 1915, had committed a breach of contract by transferring some of his property, resulting in the refusal of the banks further to accept his indorsements, which defendant alleged, in a general way, resulted in damage to it in the sum of $10,000. Defendant also averred that the capital stock available for the purpose, which it had sold to time of suit, would not aggregate sufficient, if applied as stated in the contract, to pay its obligations held by plaintiff, since the corporation had accepted notes, instead of cash, for a large part of such stock, some of which notes had not been paid. The various issues of fact involved in the controversy were submitted to the jury, and, as shown by the verdict, were found against defendant, judgment was entered accordingly, and this appeal followed.

[1] With reference to the stock sales, the court below was entirely correct in charging that, on the facts at bar, sales on notes, forthwith discounted, were to be treated as sales "for cash" within the meaning of the contract between plaintiff and defendant, which distinguishes stock sold for cash from that issued in exchange for stock of the old company and to accomplish certain other purposes therein mentioned. The agreement in question provides that the proceeds of such cash sales are to be applied, in the manner hereinbefore stated, to the reduction of defendant's various obligations to plaintiff. In disposing of its stock, upon several occasions defendant accepted notes, which were forthwith discounted for cash. Under the circumstances, it would work grave injustice to permit such a subterfuge to delay the enforcement of this company's contractual obligations; but it is not necessary to rest upon that ground the affirmance of the present judgment, for there is ample evidence upon the record to prove that, at the time of this action, defendant had sold for actual cash enough stock fully to pay the notes in suit.

[2, 3] As to the question of the first breach of contract, there is evidence sufficient to sustain a finding that, in February, 1915, the Delaware company refused to pay the note of $500 then accruing, at the same time notifying plaintiff it would not meet any more of such obligations, and he would have to sue thereon. With this evidence believed by the jury, as the verdict indicates it was, a breach was proved against defendant; and plaintiff's testimony shows that, upon the date in question, the latter was not in default as to his promised indorsements on the notes for $9,100. Defendant contends, however, that plaintiff was in default in the respect last mentioned, in that he transferred property to such an extent as to impair his financial credit; and it complains because the trial judge refused testimony concerning these alleged transfers. We see no error in the rulings of the court below upon the subject in hand. There is nothing in the agreement between the parties to prohibit plaintiff from transferring or disposing of his property, and, in addition, it appears that Kennedy attempted no such assignments or transfers until after the Delaware company's refusal to pay the note due him in February, 1915, that is, until after defendant's breach of contract. We have read the authorities cited by appellant as applicable to this branch of the case, but none of them rules the facts at bar.

In one of its assignments, appellant complains because the court below refused to allow in evidence an alleged written contract between plaintiff and E. W. Rothrock individually, which the latter claims, in effect, modified the contract in suit "with reference to the application of money arising from sales of stock." We see no error in this ruling. If there was any breach of the terms of this collateral agreement, the damages accruing therefrom may, perhaps, be recovered by Rothrock personally; but the court below was right in holding that such breach could not affect the questions involved in the present suit.

[4, 5] Another assignment complains of an alleged inconsistency between a part of the charge, dealing with plaintiff's right to regain the amount paid by him on the before-mentioned note of $1,000, and a point covering the same item. It appears the trial judge said that, if Kennedy had to pay this note of $1,000, "then he would be put in the position of the bank," and "would have the right to recover the amount the bank collected from him"; but later on, in answer to the point, the jury was plainly told that plaintiff could not recover "anything" upon the item of $1,000, unless he "proved to the satisfaction of the jury," by the weight of all the evidence in the case, that he had, in all particulars, lived up to his agreement with defendant. It is quite plain this inconsistency could have done defendant no harm. In the first place, plaintiff paid the note for $1,000, and might have had the judgment thereon marked to his use. (Carnegie Nat. Bk. v. Seibel, 255 Pa.

473, 100 Atl. 279); but he preferred to include the item in his present suit. Next, as already indicated, the verdict comprehends a finding that defendant, and not plaintiff, was the party in default; and the last thing said to the jury, upon the subject of this note, was the affirmation of the point to the effect that there could be no recovery unless plaintiff proved "by the weight of the evidence" that he had not breached his contract. Finally, it was the duty of counsel to call the court's attention to the alleged inconsistency, when the trial judge, after answering all points, asked, "Is there anything else, gentlemen, you desire me to say to the jury?" We see no merit in this assignment.

[6] The assignment most strenuously insisted upon alleges that the court below erred "in overruling defendant's motion in arrest of judgment." In this connection the complaint is of a misjoinder of actions. The suit was instituted in December, 1915. An affidavit of defense was filed, a plea in abatement entered, the general issue pleaded, and then defendant, by leave of court, filed a special plea of set-off. In none of these, however, did it suggest a misjoinder of actions, or complain because plaintiff was endeavoring to recover one of the items in suit as a use plaintiff, while he claimed the others as legal plaintiff. After trial, defendant for the first time raised the objection in question. We cannot perceive in what manner the defendant was prejudiced by the so-called misjoinder, and we agree with the learned court below that, after full notice of the cause of action in plaintiff's statement of claim, defendant having "filed his affidavit of defense, entered a special plea, and had a fair trial, it is now too late [for it] to raise the objection that there was a misjoinder." Whitney v. Haskell, 216 Pa. 622, 628, 66 Atl. 101, and cases there cited.

[7, 8] Another matter calls for notice. Defendant contends that plaintiff recovered too much interest. The declaration asks interest only from December 4, 1915; but, as a matter of fact, on the bulk of the claims in suit, it was actually due from December 4, 1914, and the special verdict shows an allowance thereof from that date. Under the circumstances, the declaration might be treated as amended to agree with the judgment on the verdict (Passenger C. L. Ins. Co. v. Birnbaum, 116 Pa. 565, 572, 11 Atl. 378; Fonder v. Rosenstein, 53 Pa. Super. Ct. 161, 165; Wilson v. Pullman Co. [No. 1] 65 Pa. Super. Ct. 499, 507); but it is not necessary to follow this course, for, since appellant's statement of "questions involved" makes no reference to the matter of interest, that subject is not properly before us, and need not be considered (Willcock v. Beaver Valley Railroad Co., 229 Pa. 526, 530, 79 Atl. 138; Smith v. Lehigh Valley R. R. Co., 232 Pa. 456, 462, 81 Atl. 554; Pramuk's Appeal, 250 Pa. 45, 51, 95 Atl. 828; Vulcanite Paving Co. v. Philadelphia [No. 1] 252 Pa. 600, 601, 602, 97 Atl. 928; Spang v. Mattes, 253 Pa. 101, 108, 97 Atl. 1026; Hopkins v. Tate, 255 Pa. 56, 62, 99 Atl. 210).

The assignments are overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

(261 Pa. 602)

WARRUNA v. DICK.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 17, 1918.)

1. TRIAL \S 260(1)—CHARGE OF COURT—FAILURE TO ANSWER POINT.

Failure to answer a point is not error, if its subject-matter is elsewhere passed upon in charge.

2. HIGHWAYS \S 172(1) — USE — RIGHTS OF PEDESTRIAN.

A pedestrian has an equal right with the driver of a vehicle on every part of a public road, but must have regard to the rights of others and to the customs of the road.

3. HIGHWAYS \S 172(1)—INJURIES TO PEDESTRIAN—RIGHTS OF PARTIES.

Where pedestrian, blind in one eye, left side of road and went into middle of road to obtain ride in automobile going in same direction, an instruction that driver of automobile approaching his blind side was bound to anticipate meeting infirm persons in road, and to have his automobile under control, and to run it at proper speed, was going as far as the court properly could.

4. TRIAL \S 244(5) — INSTRUCTIONS — UNDUE PROMINENCE—COMMENT ON TESTIMONY.

For trial court to say that testimony of a disinterested witness "is of the utmost importance in the case" does not give undue prominence to such testimony.

5. EVIDENCE \S 492 — OPINION EVIDENCE — SPEED.

In action for personal injury when struck by automobile, refusal to permit witness to state whether defendant's automobile was traveling "fast or slow," on ground that one may call a thing fast which another would call slow, was proper.

6. HIGHWAYS \S 184(3)—INJURY FROM AUTOMOBILE—WARNING—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In action for personal injury when struck by automobile while standing in middle of road, where witness testified that he heard no warning and was in position to hear one, had it been given, whether warning was given was for jury.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR \S 1068(4)—OMISSION OF CHARGE—IMMATERIALITY.

In action for personal injury, plaintiff's assignment of error in charge relating to measure of damage was unimportant, where verdict was for defendant.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Luzerne County.

Trespass for personal injury by Charles Warruna against William H. Dick. Verdict for defendant, and judgment thereon, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCHIZSKER, FRAZER, WALLING, and SIMPSON, JJ.

Frank P. Boyle, of Hazleton, and Edward A. Lynch, of Wilkes-Barre, for appellant. John H. Bigelow, of Hazleton, and Joseph Mulhern, of Wilkes-Barre, for appellee.

SIMPSON, J. While walking on the side of a public highway, plaintiff, who was blind in one eye, espied an approaching automobile going in the same direction as himself, and walked or ran into the middle of the road in order to obtain a ride upon it. It did not stop for him, and as he stood there he was struck by defendant's automobile, which was going in the opposite direction. As his basis for recovery he only avers excessive speed on the part of defendant, who denies that charge and alleges contributory negligence on plaintiff's part. The jury found a verdict for defendant. The only errors assigned relate to the charge.

[1] The first assignment complains because the court did not specifically answer plaintiff's first point, to the effect that he had an equal right with the defendant to be where he was at the time of the accident; but the failure to answer it becomes unimportant, in view of the fact that the court charged, as complained of in the second assignment, that "the plaintiff and defendant did not have equal rights to the road at that point." If that charge was right, the failure to answer the point was not error.

[2, 3] It may be admitted that a pedestrian has an equal right with the driver of a vehicle on every part of a public road, but in exercising his right he must have regard to the rights of others, and to the customs of the road. Traffic would be greatly impeded if pedestrians were held entitled to walk or stand on a public highway when, where, and as they please, and particularly on a road but 20 feet wide, as was this one. Under such circumstances, even if the traffic was moving in but one direction, vehicles could not travel faster than the speed of the slowest pedestrian. By reason of these facts, despite the right under proper circumstances to use any part of the highway, custom has established the rule of "Keep to the right"; and it has no less established the rule of pedestrians using the sides and vehicles the center of the highway, subject to certain modifications not necessary to be here considered, inasmuch as plaintiff left the side and went into the middle of the road solely because he wished to get a ride on the approaching automobile. When he was injured, he was not even walking in the road, but was standing in a place which he knew was usually traversed by vehicles; and he so stood with his blind side towards defendant's approaching automobile, the driver of which had no reason to suspect either plaintiff's continuous standing there or his blindness. Under such circumstances the court below certainly went as far as it properly could when, at his request, it told the jury that defendant "was bound to anticipate that he might meet infirm persons on this public highway, and * * * it was his duty to have his automobile under control and to run it at a proper rate of speed."

[4] The third assignment complains because undue prominence was given to the testimony of the driver of the automobile in which defendant was seeking to obtain a ride. He was a disinterested witness, who was in a position to see all that occurred, and to say that his "testimony is of the utmost importance in the case" is but to state a truism.

[5] The fourth and fifth assignments complained because a witness was not permitted to state the "rate of speed" at which defendant's automobile was traveling, and whether it was traveling "fast or slow." As to the former, the witness had testified that he was too far away to give a correct estimate as to the rate of speed; and as to the latter, the objection was sustained because "one may call a thing fast which another man would call slow," certainly a valid objection, which plaintiff did not try to meet.

[6] The sixth assignment complains because another witness was not allowed to "state whether or not a warning was given." He had already testified that he heard none, and would have been in position to hear one, had it been given. This was all that he actually knew. It was for the jury, and not for the witness, to draw therefrom the conclusion sought by the question.

[7] The seventh and last assignment complains of a part of the charge relating to the measure of damages; but, as the verdict was for defendant, that matter became unimportant.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

(261 Pa. 468)

THOMAS RABY, Inc., v. WARD-MEEHAN CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 3, 1918.)

1. SALES §418(2)—BREACH OF CONTRACT — DAMAGES.

Measure of damages to a buyer from a seller's failure to deliver goods according to contract is the difference between the contract price and the market value of goods at the time and place of delivery.

2. ACCOUNT. ACTION ON §21—AFFIDAVIT OF DEFENSE—SUFFICIENCY.

In action on book account for goods sold, where affidavit of defense contained writings under which it was alleged goods were sold, and on which suit should have been brought, but where such writings were simply confirmations of sale, and where nothing showed that orders were given in writing, judgment for want of sufficient affidavit of defense was properly entered for plaintiff, less damage to defendant as to goods not delivered.

3. DAMAGES §23—BREACH OF CONTRACTS—MEASURE.

The general rule is that on breach of contract the measure of damages is such as may be fairly and reasonably considered as naturally arising from the breach according to the usual course of business, and under circumstances contemplated by the parties when the contract was made.

4. DAMAGES §23 — BREACH OF CONTRACT — PARTICULAR CIRCUMSTANCES.

Damages resulting from particular circumstances connected with the transaction cannot be recovered, unless known to the defaulting party to the contract, and unless such as may be supposed to have entered into the contemplation of the parties.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Assumpsit for goods sold and delivered by Thomas Raby, Incorporated, against the Ward-Meehan Company. From a judgment for plaintiff for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense, assessing damages at $3,215.38, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKE, and FRAZER, JJ.

M. D. Hayes, William H. Wilson, and Francis M. McAdams, all of Philadelphia, for appellant. Alex. Simpson, Jr., and Clinton O. Mayer, both of Philadelphia, for appellee.

FRAZER, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment entered in favor of plaintiff for the portion of the claim as to which the affidavit of defense was deemed insufficient. The action is on a book account for goods sold and delivered amounting to $5,280.83, a copy of the account being attached to the statement of claim. The affidavit of defense denies defendant "ordered or received any goods whatsoever from plaintiff upon an open book account, but avers that the items charged to plaintiff in the book account * * * were bought by virtue of written contracts hereinafter more fully recited in the statement of counterclaim," and concluded with a denial that defendant "is indebted to plaintiff in any sum whatsoever for goods purchased through an open account." No denial, however, is made that defendant received the goods or that the prices charged were proper. The counterclaim avers written contracts were entered into between plaintiff and defendant on the dates specified, whereby the former agreed to deliver to the latter certain merchandise, that on several of the contracts plaintiff refused to deliver the entire order, while on others no deliveries were made. In consequence of such default defendant was forced to resort to the open market and procure the goods at a price in excess of the contract price, specifying amounts and prices, resulting in a total loss to defendant of $2,188.49. Defendant also claims a further loss of profits by reason of being obliged to discontinue the use of 40 looms, during a period of two months, owing to the refusal of plaintiff to comply with the terms of his various contracts; the total claim for damage in this respect being $2,880.

[1] As to the loss resulting from the increased price defendant was obliged to pay for the goods in the open market, the court below cor-age to a purchaser for the failure of the vendor to deliver goods according to contracts is the difference between the contract price and the market value of the article at the time and place of delivery. Morris v. Supplee, 208 Pa. 253, 57 Atl. 566; Honesdale Ice Co. v. Lake Lodore Imp. Co., 232 Pa. 293, 81 Atl. 306. This rule is embodied in section 67 of the Sales Act of May 19, 1915 (P. L. 543, 562).

[2] The main contention of defendant is that the contracts were entire for the delivery of specific goods, and no recovery can be had by plaintiff without showing complete performance, or that performance was prevented by defendant. Conceding the general rule, the present case does not appear from the affidavit of defense to be within the authorities cited by defendant. In the first place, the alleged special contracts relied upon and attached to the affidavit of defense do not require plaintiff to declare on them specially, instead of the book account for goods sold and delivered. The writings set out are not orders, but merely confirmation of sales, apparently sent by plaintiff in accordance with a usual business custom to acknowledge orders received, whether verbally or in writing, for the purpose of avoiding mistakes as to quantity, price, description, or otherwise. We find nothing in the affidavit to show whether the orders in this case were in writing or merely verbal. Had plaintiff's action been brought on the exhibits as contracts, defendant might well argue the statement is defective on its face, as being an action on mere self-serving declarations made by plaintiff, and without signature or assent on part of defendant. The transaction was evidently one occurring in the ordinary course of business dealings between the parties, and in our examination of the affidavit of defense we fail to find any averment warranting the conclusion that the subject-matter of the sale is not the proper subject of the book account. The action, accordingly, was properly brought. Vallee Bros. Electrical Co. v. North Penn Iron Co., 32 Pa. Super. Ct. 111.

The alleged written contracts being eliminated, the affidavit of defense presents nothing to prevent the entry of judgment for the amount of goods sold, less the excess defendant was obliged to pay to procure in the market undelivered goods; the entry of judgment for plaintiff for the difference was consequently proper, unless defendant should be entitled to set off the further claim for loss by reason of inability to operate its looms, owing to delay in obtaining materials.

[3, 4] The general rule governing the measure of damages for breach of contract is that they are such as may be fairly and reasonably considered as naturally arising from the

by the parties at the time the contract was entered into. Damages, however, resulting from particular circumstances connected with the transaction, cannot be recovered, unless such circumstances were known to the defaulting party to the contract, and were such as may be supposed to have entered into the contemplation of the parties. This is the rule established by the leading English case of Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341, where the court held the carrier was not liable for damages incident to the stopping of plaintiff's mill during the period of delay in the delivery of a part of a machine sent for repairs and transported by defendant in absence of evidence of defendant being advised the stoppage of plaintiff's mill was due entirely to the broken shaft and loss of profits would result from delay on its part to make prompt delivery. The principle laid down in that case has been followed by Pennsylvania courts in Adams Express Co. v. Egbert, 36 Pa. 360, 78 Am. Dec. 382, Billmeyer Dill & Co. v. Wagner, 91 Pa. 92, Hutchinson v. Snider, 137 Pa. 1, 20 Atl. 510, Kluports v. Breon, 193 Pa. 309, 44 Atl. 436, and many others. We find no averment, in the affidavit of defense or counterclaim, of plaintiff having knowledge that his failure to deliver the materials would result in the stoppage of defendant's mill, nor an averment of defendant's inability to procure in the open market goods to take the place of those plaintiff failed to deliver. As matter of fact, the counterclaim expressly states defendant did purchase in the market other goods at an increased price, and the claim for loss by reason of such increased price has been allowed in full by the court below. There being nothing to indicate special circumstances from which could be inferred the parties contemplated anything beyond the usual measure of damage resulting from breach of contract to deliver goods, this item of damage cannot be considered.

The judgment is affirmed.

(201 Pa. 512)

PUSIO v. SALAK et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 3, 1918.)

1. DEEDS ¶211(3)—FRAUD—EVIDENCE.

On a bill for cancellation of a deed, evidence held to establish fraud.

2. DEEDS ¶210—CONSIDERATION—EVIDENCE.

On a bill for cancellation of a deed, evidence held to sustain the chancellor's finding that the deed was without consideration.

3. ACKNOWLEDGMENT ¶52—DEEDS—KNOWLEDGE OF CONTENTS.

A certificate of acknowledgment of a deed is prima facie evidence of its due execution, including knowledge of its contents.

4. ACKNOWLEDGMENT ¶56—GROUNDS OF IMPEACHING—FRAUD.

The presumption of due execution raised by acknowledgment of a deed is subject to rebuttal, where fraud is alleged, especially where there are no intervening rights.

5. FRAUD §50—PRESUMPTION — BURDEN OF PROOF.

Fraud must be established by clear and satisfactory evidence, as it is never presumed.

6. FRAUD §58(1)—PROOF—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

Fraud may be shown by direct or circumstantial evidence or by a combination of both.

7. DEEDS §203—FRAUD—WANT OF CONSIDERATION—IMPROVIDENCE.

Want of consideration for a conveyance does not prove fraud, but is a circumstance to be considered upon that question in connection with other evidence, as is also glaring improvidence.

8. DEEDS §203—KNOWLEDGE OF CONTENTS — FRAUD.

While a grantor is presumed to know the contents of his deed, even when written in a language which he is unable to read or understand, yet that circumstance may be considered as lending a probability to evidence of actual fraud.

9. EVIDENCE §434(3)—PAROL EVIDENCE — FRAUDULENT ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF DEED.

Parol evidence is competent to show fraud in the acknowledgment of a deed.

10. EVIDENCE §434(3)—PAROL EVIDENCE—EXECUTION OF DEED.

Parol evidence is competent to show fraud in the execution of a deed.

11. DEEDS §70(6)—FRAUD — EQUITY JURISDICTION.

Where ignorant man is induced by fraud and deception to execute a deed of his property, which he is unable to read, under the representation by his wife, etc., that it is a wholly different paper, equity has jurisdiction to decree its cancellation and a restoration of property.

12. DEEDS §211(3)—FRAUD—PROOF.

In action to set aside a deed for fraud, the fraud must be clearly and satisfactorily shown, and the witnesses must be credible, and the facts distinctly remembered and accurately stated.

13. TRIAL §139(1)—QUESTION FOR JURY — EVIDENCE.

Whether the evidence is true is a question of fact, and whether, if true, it is sufficient, is a question of law.

14. APPEAL AND ERROR §1000(2) — FINDINGS OF FACT—REVIEW.

Findings of fact in equity on sufficient evidence will not be disturbed, except for manifest error.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Allegheny County.

Bill in equity for cancellation of deed and for an accounting by Steve Pusic against Anna Salak and others. From a decree for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKE, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Joseph R. Conrad, of Pittsburgh, for appellants. W. W. Stoner, of Pittsburgh, for appellee.

WALLING, J. This is a bill in equity to secure the cancellation of an alleged fraudulent deed and for other relief connected therewith. The defendants are plaintiff's daughter and her husband and also plain-tiff's wife. The case was heard upon bill, answer, replication, and testimony. The chancellor's findings of the facts in favor of plaintiff were approved by the court below, and from final decree entered thereon, granting the relief prayed for, the defendants brought this appeal. The real question is: Are the facts as found justified by the evidence? In our opinion they are.

[1-4] Plaintiff came to this country from Russia over 30 years ago, and shortly thereafter married his present wife, Mary Pusic. They located at McKees Rocks, near Pittsburgh, where he engaged in the grocery and meat business and accumulated some property. He cannot speak English nor read or write in any language. In 1907 he bought and paid for a block of four lots on Gardner street in said borough, intending to have the deed therefor made to himself and wife jointly; but the wife, who could speak English and acted for him in the purchase, fraudulently had the deed made to herself as sole owner, and it was so recorded. Mr. Pusic, in ignorance thereof, erected upon the lots a large three-story brick apartment house containing 42 rooms, the income from which amounts to about $1,800 per year. They owned another property where they lived on Washington street. About the end of 1913 Mr. Pusic's store was destroyed by fire, and in January, 1914, through the persuasion of an agent, he bought in the name of his wife a saloon in New York City for $5,000, and embarked in that business. He made various payments on the saloon property, amounting in all to about $3,000, but it proved unprofitable, and he lost what he had paid thereon, and returned to McKees Rocks in October of the same year. Meantime, in April, 1914, his wife and daughter, Mrs. Salak, went to an attorney in Pittsburgh and had a warranty deed prepared conveying the apartment house property from Mr. and Mrs. Pusic to Mrs. Salak. The property was worth approximately $10,000, and there was a mortgage upon it amounting to about $4,000. Mrs. Pusic executed the deed in Pittsburgh, and then took it to New York to secure its execution by her husband. It was well understood between her and Mrs. Salak that Mr. Pusic would not knowingly sign such a deed, and so it was agreed between them that his wife should inform him that the deed was a paper referring to the saloon property and induce him to go before an officer with that understanding and execute it, which was done; Mr. Pusic stated to the officer, or acquiesced in his wife's statement, that he knew the contents of the paper. It was subsequently returned to Pittsburgh and recorded. Plaintiff had no knowledge of what he had done until after his return from New York as above stated. While the deed recites a consideration of $2,600, in fact no consideration whatever was paid. There is condiff's behalf, which was credited by the chancellor. The controlling averments in the bill were denied in the answer filed by Mr. and Mrs. Salak, but were fully admitted in the answer and evidence of Mrs. Pusic. Plaintiff testifies that he never executed the deed in question or any deed of like import, while he did execute some papers relating to the saloon property in New York. The officer who took the acknowledgment was not called as a witness; his certificate, however, sets forth that—

"On this 4th day of April, A. D. 1914, before me, a commissioner of deeds in and for the city of New York, came the above named Steve Pusic, husband of Mary Pusic, and one of the parties of the first part hereto, and acknowledged the foregoing indenture to be his act and deed, and desired the same to be recorded as such."

This is prima facie evidence of the due execution of the deed, including knowledge of its contents, but is subject to rebuttal where fraud is alleged. The certificate does not aver that the contents of the deed were made known to Mr. Pusic, and the only direct evidence on the subject is that of himself and wife to the effect that they were not. This is strengthened by statements in a letter written shortly thereafter by the grantee, Mrs. Salak, to her sister, Carrie, in New York, stating, inter alia:

"So please, Carrie, answer right away. Does Pap know what Mam and he done? Let me know what Pap says."

The conclusion that this refers to the deed in question is justifiable, although it does not so state. The evidence of Mr. and Mrs. Salak as to the payment of the $2,600 consideration is so incredible as to strengthen plaintiff's case. They were married in 1911, and for about 2½ years thereafter lived with her parents, and Mr. and Mrs. Salak testify that all of his wages during that period, amounting to about $2,100, were turned over to Mrs. Pusic, and that the other $500 was money borrowed from his sister-in-law and turned over to Mr. Pusic for use in the New York saloon; while in fact his entire earnings during that time did not amount to $2,100, to say nothing of the support of himself and wife, the funeral expenses of a child, the cost of litigation in which he was involved, and other expenses. Not one of his pay checks was cashed by Mr. and Mrs. Pusic, and the contention that he so turned over this large sum to his mother-in-law without any agreement or anything to show for it is highly improbable. The testimony of plaintiff and his wife that Mr. Salak paid her nothing except occasionally a small sum for board seems probable. The $500 was not secured until about two months after the making of the deed, and then was borrowed directly by Mr. Pusic, and not by Mr. Salak. So the chancellor's finding that the deed was

There were two mortgages against the Washington street property, and about the time of securing this deed Mrs. Salak went to the attorney representing these mortgages and requested him to foreclose the same, ostensibly to protect her parents, and she advanced the attorney $250 to cover costs and fees. Proceedings to that effect were started, but discontinued on discovering that they were not taken in the interest of Mr. and Mrs. Pusic. The evidence justifies the conclusion that this daughter was trying to secure for herself the property which her father had accumulated. Mr. Pusic was then 50 years of age, and it is improbable that he would voluntarily deprive himself and wife of their property. Mrs. Pusic seeks to extenuate her faithless conduct to her husband on the ground that she was temporarily frightened by the baseless assertion of Mrs. Salak and others that all their property would be swept away by reason of the saloon venture. Mrs. Pusic does not appear in a favorable light, and plaintiff would not be granted relief on her unsupported testimony; but she is so strongly corroborated by other evidence and the circumstances as to justify the findings of the chancellor. Plaintiff and his wife have one other child, the daughter, Carrie, who is younger and unmarried.

[5-7] Fraud must be established by clear and satisfactory evidence, as it is never presumed. It may be proven, however, by direct or circumstantial evidence or by a combination of both. See Jones v. Lewis, 148 Pa. 234, 23 Atl. 985. Want of consideration for a conveyance does not prove fraud, but it is a circumstance to be considered upon that question in connection with other evidence, as is also glaring improbvidence. See Blerer's Appeal, 92 Pa. 265; Davidson v. Little, 22 Pa. 245, 60 Am. Dec. 81.

[8-10] A grantor is presumed to know the contents of a deed executed by him, even when written in a language which he is unable to read or understand; yet that circumstance may be considered as lending probability to evidence of actual fraud and deception. It would be less difficult to deceive such a man, especially where as in this case the paper was presented to him by his wife, in whom he reposed confidence. See Monroe v. Monroe, 93 Pa. 520; Fischer's Estate, 189 Pa. 179, 42 Atl. 8; Levick v. Brotherline, 74 Pa. 149. The officer's certificate is prima facie evidence of the due execution of the deed, but may be rebutted, especially where as here there are no intervening rights. See Hultz v. Ackley, 63 Pa. 142. Parol evidence is competent to show fraud in the execution or acknowledgment of a deed. Cover and Wife v. Manaway, 115 Pa. 338, 345, 8 Atl. 393, 2 Am. St. Rep. 552.

[11] Where an ignorant man by fraud and deception is induced to execute a deed of his property, which he is unable to read, under the representation, assurance, and belief that it is an entirely different paper, equity has jurisdiction to decree the cancellation of the deed and restoration of the property. See Wagner v. Fehr, 211 Pa. 435, 60 Atl. 1043, 3 Ann. Cas. 608.

[12] In an action to set aside a deed for fraud it must be clearly and satisfactorily shown. See Sulkin v. Gilbert, 218 Pa. 255, 260, 67 Atl. 415; Pyroleum Appliance Co. v. Williamsport Hardware, etc., Co., 169 Pa. 440, 32 Atl. 458; Young v. Edwards, 72 Pa. 257; Wolfe v. Arrott, 109 Pa. 473, 1 Atl. 333. The witness must be credible and the facts distinctly remembered and accurately stated. Burt v. Burt, 221 Pa. 171, 70 Atl. 710; Douglas v. Union Traction Co., 198 Pa. 430, 48 Atl. 262. Assuming that the burden of proof here was on plaintiff and that it required the high degree of evidence known as "clear, precise, and indubitable," yet it cannot be declared as matter of law that it did not come up to that standard. See McGrann v. P. & L. E. R. R. Co., 111 Pa. 171, 2 Atl. 872.

[13] Whether the evidence is true is a question of fact; if true, whether it is sufficient is a question of law. The evidence favorable to plaintiff, if believed, as it was by the chancellor, justifies the relief granted, and while there is some conflict in the evidence, we are not inclined to criticize his conclusions.

[14] In any event the findings of facts in equity on sufficient evidence will not be disturbed except for manifest error. Strause v. Berger, 220 Pa. 367, 69 Atl. 818; Rosensteel v. Long, 65 Pa. Super. Ct. 541. Under the findings, the defendants have no right to retain the property at issue, while the decree giving it to plaintiff does substantial justice, and Mrs. Pusic is not complaining.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the decree is affirmed at the costs of appellants.

(261 Pa. 390)

SURAVITZ v. PRUDENTIAL INS. CO. OF AMERICA.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 3, 1918.)

1. NEW TRIAL §104(3)—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE—DISCRETION.

In assumpsit on policy issued on joint lives of plaintiff and his wife, defended on ground of another's impersonation of wife before medical examiner, denial of new trial on ground of witness' statement that his testimony had been false, in view of cumulative character of evidence, held not an abuse of discretion.

2. INSURANCE §665(8) — LIFE INSURANCE — FRAUD OF AGENT—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where defendant's evidence as to deceased's false statements to medical examiner, if true, made a prima facie case, plaintiff, meeting the defense on ground that defendant's agent fraudulently and incorrectly filled in application, had burden of sustaining such ground by clear and satisfactory evidence.

3. TRIAL §237(3)—INSTRUCTIONS—"WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE"—BURDEN OF PROOF.

An instruction that plaintiff must establish a fact by weight of evidence is erroneous as not being equivalent to clear and satisfactory proof. [Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Weight of Evidence.]

4. INSURANCE §646(1) — LIFE INSURANCE — IDENTITY OF INSURED—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where the fact is contested, the burden is always on the insured to show that the person whose death is proved was the person insured.

5. INSURANCE §665(3) — LIFE INSURANCE — IMPERSONATION OF APPLICANT—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In action on a policy, defendant, claiming that another had impersonated the alleged insured on the medical examination, had the burden of proving such affirmative defense by a preponderance of clear and satisfactory evidence.

6. EVIDENCE §91—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden of establishing facts by such character of proofs as the law demands, and the weight of the evidence, always rests upon party asserting such facts, although as to the necessity of producing evidence the burden of proof may shift during the trial.

7. EVIDENCE §98 — AFFIRMATIVE ALLEGATION—BURDEN OF PROOF.

If there is a conflict on material facts, and it is decided that the preponderance of the evidence does not lie with the party alleging the affirmative, the burden of proof has not been sustained by such party, and the jury must find against him.

8. EVIDENCE §96(1)—IMPERSONATION OF APPLICANT—SHIFTING OF BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where defendant's evidence was sufficient in kind and character to carry a reasonable degree of conviction, the burden of adducing counter proof shifted.

9. EVIDENCE §96(1)—SHIFTING OF BURDEN OF PROOF.

In action on policy, where proof of impersonation of insured before medical examiner, as alleged by defendant, was insufficient in character or did not carry conviction, there was no shifting of burden, as there was a failure to sustain burden originally assumed.

10. EVIDENCE §98—BURDEN OF PROOF—DECISION.

Where jury find the evidence in equilibrium upon an affirmative defense on which the defendant has the burden of proof, its decision should be against defendant, because not sustaining the burden of proof.

11. TRIAL §237(3)—INSTRUCTIONS—PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE.

In action upon policy, defended on ground of impersonation of insured before medical examiner, instructions that jury must decide as to preponderance of evidence, and, if it favored defendant, should find accordingly, without instructing that burden was on defendant to sustain charge by clear and satisfactory evidence, were not error.

12. INSURANCE §668(15) — IMPERSONATION OF APPLICANT — CONDUCT OF INSURER'S AGENT.

In action upon policy defended on ground of false statements by applicant as to condition of health, and where plaintiff claimed that applicant had little knowledge of English and confided in insurer's agent, the issue was for the jury.

if applicants for insurance, because of poor understanding of English, did not know of illness from which an applicant was suffering, and if agent wrongfully transcribed answers, failure of insured to call insurer's attention to incorrect answers in application would not entitle insurer to verdict in action on policy.

14. INSURANCE — 655(2)—IMPERSONATION OF APPLICANT—EVIDENCE.

In action on policy defended on grounds of impersonation of applicant before medical examiner and of false statements as to health, testimony of physician, who had attended insured before issuance of policy, as to her condition then and whether it would have been discovered was relevant as to applicant's identity.

15. APPEAL AND ERROR — 1058(2)—HARMLESS ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

In action on policy defended for impersonation of applicant, exclusion of question to medical witness whether insured had such a weak heart that a doctor using ordinary care would have discovered it, though admissible on question of impersonation, was harmless error, where doctor had testified that weakness could be determined without a stethoscope.

16. TRIAL — 261—INSTRUCTION—ERRONEOUS REQUESTS—OPINION EVIDENCE.

In action on policy involving misrepresentations as to health of alleged insured, failure to charge that statements of lay witnesses, knowing insured, that she was apparently in good health, would not discredit positive statement of attending physician, was not error, where request lacked essential explanatory words.

17. WITNESSES — 394—CREDIBILITY—INCONSISTENCY.

Where witness who had previously attended insured testified that he told plaintiff she had heart disease, and, on plaintiff's questioning, admitted its inconsistency with his testimony on former trial, it was error to refuse to permit defendant to introduce record evidence of testimony on former trial to show that testimony was not inconsistent.

18. INSURANCE — 668(6)—FRAUD OF INSURED — CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE — QUESTION FOR JURY.

In action on policy, where evidence showed ample ground for suspecting good faith of case, and where defendant relied largely on circumstantial evidence as to fraud, the case was for the jury.

19. INSURANCE — 665(3)—FRAUD OF INSURED — CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

Fraud on part of insured set up as defense to action on policy may be established by circumstantial evidence when the evidence of facts relied on for that purpose is clear and satisfactory.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Lackawanna County.

Action by Jacob Suravitz against the Prudential Insurance Company of America. Verdict for plaintiff for $2,040, and judgment thereon, and defendant appeals. Reversed, with a venire facias de novo.

See, also, 244 Pa. 582, 91 Atl. 495, L. R. A. 1915A, 273.

Argued before BROWN, O. J., and POTTER. STEWART, MOSCHZISKE, and WALLING, JJ.

A. A. Vosburg, of Scranton, for appellant. Charles P. O'Malley and P. L. Walsh, both of Scranton, for appellee.

company on the joint lives of Jacob Suravitz and Mary, his wife. The latter died, and the former brought the present suit, wherein he recovered a verdict upon which judgment was entered in his favor. Defendant has appealed.

There is no dispute about the fact of Mary Suravitz's death, or that plaintiff furnished satisfactory proofs thereof. The contest turns upon two controlling defenses: (1) Alleged misrepresentations, in the application for the policy, by plaintiff and his wife, of the latter's physical condition; (2) fraudulent substitution of another woman, in good health, for plaintiff's wife, at the examination made by defendant's medical examiner. In most part, the errors alleged concern rulings on evidence and instructions to the jury relevant to the issues thus raised.

Since there have been three trials of the present cause already, and it now becomes our duty to order a fourth, we shall discuss the several assignments of error more elaborately than might otherwise be necessary, hoping in this way to aid in bringing the case to a final determination.

[1] A man named Glinisky testified that he knew Mary Suravitz and actually saw her undergo examination by the insurance company's doctor. It was alleged in an affidavit filed by defendant, in support of a motion for a new trial, that after verdict this witness had stated his testimony in regard to the examination of deceased was false. A hearing was fixed to take depositions, and Glinisky, while he admitted having stated what was averred in the affidavit, swore all his evidence at the trial was correct and true. We agree with the court below that the man under discussion is "not a very reliable person"; and, considering the trial judge's belief that "Glinisky was an important witness for the plaintiff," that tribunal might well have refused to enter judgment on the verdict. However, in view of the fact that the testimony in question is merely cumulative, we are disinclined to hold the refusal of a new trial an abuse of discretion constituting reversible error. The first assignment is overruled.

Consideration of the second assignment calls for preliminary notice of certain relevant facts and principles of law. The application attached to the policy contains questions addressed to Mary Suravitz and answers thereto, inter alia, as follows:

"Q. Are you in good health? A. Yes." "Q. Have you, so far as you know, ever had any serious illness or disease? A. No."

If believed, the evidence produced by defendant, professional and otherwise, shows rather conclusively that, when these answers were made, Mrs. Suravitz was, and for some time had been, suffering from a pronounced form of heart disease, and plaintiff admits that his wife had, a short while previous to the examination, been ill in the hospital with pneumonia; but plaintiff contends, as he did in his statement of claim and at trial, that at the time the application was filled out Mrs. Suravitz was unable to speak, understand, read, or write the English language, that his own knowledge thereof was very limited, that he acted as interpreter, that the agent of the insurance company wrote down the answers, and, finally, that in so doing the latter "falsely, fraudulently, negligently, mistakenly, and carelessly" inscribed answers other than those dictated to him. For example, plaintiff denies his wife answered "Yes" to the first and "No" to the second of the above-recited questions. To the first he avers "Mary Suravitz made answer that, in so far as she knew, she was in good health, or words to that effect," and to the second "she replied she had not any serious illness that she knew of, [but] that in 1908 she was ill and was in Lackawanna State Hospital [with] what doctors told her was a severe cold, but she understood that she was cured and better." The defendant, in its pleadings and at trial, denied all allegations of fraud or mistake on the part of its agent in connection with the application or otherwise.

The contract in suit provides that the answers in the application are representations, not warranties; therefore, these issues, among others, arose: (1) Did Mrs. Suravitz have heart disease? (2) If so, did she know it when she made the representations to the insurance company concerning her health?

[2] When the company put in its testimony tending to show that Mrs. Suravitz had the disease in question, this evidence, together with the answers upon the application, made out a prima facie case for defendant, which, unreplicated to, if believed by the jury, would have entitled it to a verdict. As already shown, plaintiff undertook to answer this defense in part by proof of certain facts tending to show that defendant's agent mistakenly, fraudulently, and incorrectly filled in the blank application. When plaintiff stood upon this reply, owing to its nature (as involving fraud, and, in effect, an attempt to change an integral part of the contract in suit), the burden was upon him to sustain it, not only by preponderating evidence, but by preponderating evidence of a certain kind, character, or quality, which is not overstated by the phrase "clear and satisfactory evidence." See opinion by Mr. Justice Walling in Pusic v. Salak, 104 Atl. 751, handed down simultaneously herewith.

[3] The assignment in hand complains of an answer made by the trial judge to one of defendant's points for charge, which deals with the character of evidence received, as follows:

"If the jury find that Mary Suravitz, when the application in this case was made, was suffering from a form of heart disease incurable in its nature, and that she knew she was suffering from this disease, but stated that she was in good health, then the verdict must be for the defendant; and the burden is upon the plaintiff to satisfy the jury by clear and satisfactory evidence that the answers were incorrectly written by the agent in the application. Answer: This is affirmed. In other words, we say to you, in connection with affirming this point, that, the plaintiff alleging that the answers in these two applications are not correctly written down, the burden is upon the plaintiff to establish that fact by the fair preponderance of the testimony, or weight, as we call it. That is stated in this point, and we affirm it."

Thus it will be seen that, while the above request has to do with the quality of evidence required for the purpose therein stated, the answer departs from that field and deals with the subject of the ultimate weight of the evidence, not its kind or character. Not only is the answer guilty of this material departure, but it informs the jury in unmistakable language that the request was intended to cover the subject of the weight of the evidence, which, as just pointed out, it was not.

As stated by Rice, P. J., in Taylor v. Paul, 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 496, 501:

"To instruct the jury that a fact must be established by 'the weight of the evidence' is not equivalent to saying that it must be established 'by clear and satisfactory evidence.'"

Defendant requested and was entitled to the latter instruction, which it did not get. On the contrary, the answer, as phrased, practically nullified the whole purpose of the request as drawn; while in form an affirmation, in substance and effect it was almost tantamount to a denial thereof. To say the least, the answer was not responsive to the request (Waynesboro M. F. I. Co. v. Creaton, 98 Pa. 451, 453), and in a case such as the one before us this was harmful error; therefore the second assignment is sustained.

[4, 5] As to the allegations that "plaintiff substituted another woman, not his wife, and introduced her to the [insurance company's] doctor as his wife, and caused her, instead of his wife, to be examined by the doctor," the trial judge instructed that the burden was upon defendant to prove these charges. The latter, in the third assignment, contends this was error, and that, in the first instance, the burden was on plaintiff to prove Mary Suravitz was in fact the person examined.

Of course, where the fact is contested, the burden is always on the plaintiff to show that the person whose death is proved was the person insured. Here, however, it is not contended either that Mary Suravitz was not the person who died or was not the person insured, but that, when the medical examination was made, plaintiff deliberately substituted another woman in her place. This is an affirmative defense of fraud upon the insurance company, involving the allegation of the existence of specific facts, which defendant assumed the burden of proving by a preponderance of clear and satisfactory evidence.

[6, 7] The burden of establishing facts by such character of proofs as the law demands, and the weight of the evidence, always rests upon the party asserting them, although, as to the necessity for producing evidence, the burden of proof may shift from time to time in the course of trial. When the proofs are all in, and the case is ripe for determination, it becomes a matter of weighing the evidence; and this is for the jury, under proper instructions. If there is a conflict on a material matter of fact, and it be decided that the preponderance of the evidence does not lie with the party who alleged the affirmative, then the burden of proof has not been sustained by such party, and, in the performance of its duty, the jury must find against him.

[8-10] In other words, applying the rules just stated to a case like the present, if the evidence to sustain defendant's charge of impersonation be sufficient in kind and character to carry a reasonable degree of conviction, then the burden of adducing counter proof shifts, and, after plaintiff presents his testimony upon the issue, it is for the jury to say which side the preponderance of evidence favors, determining the point in controversy accordingly. On the other hand, if the proof of impersonation is insufficient in character, or does not carry conviction, then there is no shifting of the burden, in any sense of that term; for a failure to sustain the burden originally assumed results, and the finding on the point involved should be against defendant. Finally, should the jury find the evidence in equilibrium, its decision ought to be against defendant; for, again, the latter has not sustained the burden of proof. Burford v. Fergus, 165 Pa. 310, 314, 30 Atl. 844; 10 R. O. L. 506 et seq. Also see quotation from Rice, P. J., in Quirk v. Ins. Co., 12 Pa. Super. Ct. 250, infra.

[11] While the trial judge was not requested to, and did not, go into such an elaborate explanation of the rules relevant to burden of proof as we have endeavored to do, he, in effect, charged in accordance with the principles just announced; for, in connection with the instructions complained of in the present assignment, he twice told the jury that, in the end, they must decide as to the preponderance of the evidence, and, if the fair weight thereof upon the subject under consideration favored defendant, they should render their verdict accordingly. Since defendant stood upon an allegation of fraud, as already pointed out in our consideration of the second assignment, the court might properly have gone further and instructed that the burden was upon it to sustain this charge, not only by a preponderance of evidence, but by evidence "clear and satisfactory" in character.

In Quirk v. Ins. Co., 12 Pa. Super. Ct. 250, chiefly relied upon by appellant, the plaintiff expressly assumed the burden of showing that the insured was in good health at the time the policy was issued; and, in order so to do, she undertook, as part of her case, to prove deceased had successfully passed "a searching physical examination to the satisfaction of defendant's medical examiner." In reply defendant asserted the insured had passed no such examination, but some one else was substituted in his place for that purpose. As the case was tried, the Superior Court held the court below had not erred in telling the jury plaintiff was "bound to show that the man who was examined was the man insured"; but, in connection with this ruling, Rice, P. J., correctly states the general rules on the burden of proof as we have given them above:

"When the evidence is all in, and the case is submitted for determination, there can obviously no longer be any question as to the burden of proof, so far as that term is concerned with the order of production of evidence. 5 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 21. The question then is as to the preponderance of the evidence. If at this stage there be conflicting evidence as to an essential matter of fact in issue, and in the judgment of the jury the preponderance is not in favor of the party who alleged the affirmative, they ought to decide that question of fact against him, and it is the duty of the court to so instruct them, if requested."

Although Quirk v. Ins. Co. and the case at bar have points of similarity, and much of the law there announced is applicable here, yet we do not feel that all the rules laid down as governing the trial of the former were controlling in the trial under review, where the matter of the alleged substitution was not put at issue, by pleadings, affidavit of defense, or otherwise, till defendant first introduced the subject during the presentation of its case. As this cause was developed in the court below, we see no error in the instructions on the burden of proof complained of in the third assignment, which is overruled.

[12, 13] The fourth assignment complains of the trial judge's answer to another of defendant's requests for charge, wherein the latter asked that the jury be instructed it was the duty of the person insured to call the attention of the insurance company to any incorrect answers written in the application by the latter's agent; that, since in this case there was a failure so to do, plaintiff was thereby estopped from taking advantage of the policy in suit, and "the verdict must be for the defendant." In refusing this point, the trial judge stated the applicant "was a foreigner who could not read, write, or speak the English language, and her husband could only write and read the English language imperfectly," adding, "They trusted and confided in the agent of defendant company to correctly write down their respective answers."

If the facts as to the extent of the illiteracy of plaintiff and his wife, and their trust in defendant's agent, were all admitted in the case, then, under our decision in Suravitz v. Prudential Ins. Co., 244 Pa. 582, 91

Atl. 495, L. R. A. 1915A, 273, the strict rules laid down in Rinker v. Aetna Co., 214 Pa. 608, 64 Atl. 82, 112 Am. St. Rep. 773, cited by appellant, would not be applicable, and a refusal of the point would be justifiable on that ground alone; but, since such facts were not admitted, the court, instead of treating them as established, should have recognized at all times the province of the jury to pass upon and determine the extent of the knowledge of the English language possessed by Suravitz and his wife (particularly the former, in view of his apparent linguistic proficiency at the trial), and also the degree in which they trusted to and confided in the agent of the company. In the respects indicated, the answer under consideration was erroneous; but, since the point requested binding instructions for defendant, it could not properly have been affirmed.

In the Rinker Case, supra, the answers in the application were all warranted to be true, and it was therein agreed that, if they were not so, the insurance should be void; whereas under the express terms of the present application the answers are not warranties, but representations. The material difference in the governing rules of law between the two cases is pointed out by us in Suravitz v. Prudential Co., supra (see, also, Oplinger v. New York Life Ins. Co., 253 Pa. 328, 98 Atl. 568, Feinberg v. New York Life Ins. Co., 256 Pa. 61, 100 Atl. 538, and Baer v. State Life Ins. Co., 256 Pa. 177, 100 Atl. 745), and thereunder, if the jury believed the testimony presented by plaintiff as to the illiteracy of himself and wife, their alleged lack of knowledge of the ailment from which the latter (as alleged by defendant) was suffering, and the alleged misconduct of the agent of the defendant company in wrongly transcribing their answers, then the failure to call the insurance company's attention to any incorrect answers in the application would not entitle the latter to binding instructions in its favor, as requested in the point now under consideration; hence no reversible error is shown by the present assignment, and it is overruled.

[14, 15] The fifth assignment alleges that the trial judge erred in excluding a question put by defendant's counsel to Dr. J. A. McGinty, who had attended and physically examined Mrs. Suravitz in June, July, August, September, November, and December, 1908, prior to the issuance of the policy in suit. This doctor testified that at the time of his examinations he found deceased suffering from serious heart trouble. The witness was then asked, "Was her condition at that time such that a doctor, using ordinary care in making a medical examination, would have discovered this heart murmur that you speak of?" Plaintiff's objection to the question was sustained, and an exception granted defendant. Appellant contends that the evidence sought to be elicited was relevant, as "bearing upon the question whether or not the real Mary Suravitz was the woman examined," and for that reason it should have been admitted. We can see the relevancy of the offer, from the standpoint indicated; but it is apparent no harm was done appellant by the ruling here in question, for Dr. McGinty plainly testified that the murmur was so pronounced "it could be detected by the use of the ear without the stethoscope," and that he had no difficulty "in detecting this murmur"—which could be understood by the jury to mean only that "a doctor, using ordinary care in making a medical examination, would have discovered this heart murmur." The assignment, showing no reversible error, is overruled.

[16] The sixth assignment complains because the trial judge failed to read and affirm the following request for charge:

"Statements of lay witnesses that they knew the insured and that she was apparently in good health are insufficient to discredit the positive statements of physicians who had treated her for heart disease."

The failure to read and affirm this point might have been error, had it been preceded by some explanatory words, for example, "When the jury consider the question whether or not, at the time of her examination for the insurance, Mrs. Suravitz was suffering from heart disease, I instruct you that," or "When the jury come to consider the actual condition of health of Mrs. Suravitz, etc.;" but, since the request lacked such essential explanatory words, the court below cannot be held to have erred in failing to affirm it, as drawn. Under the circumstances, we see no merit in the present assignment; it is overruled.

[17] The seventh assignment complains that the trial judge erred "in excluding the record relating to the testimony of Dr. J. A. McGinty given at a former trial of this case." At the trial now under review this doctor testified that in 1908, prior to the issuance of the insurance, he told plaintiff the latter's wife had heart disease. After this testimony was in, counsel for plaintiff asked the witness, "You recall, now, don't you, that your testimony to-day is different from what it was at the last trial?" The question was not answered. Counsel then asked if at the prior trial the witness had not said, "I simply told him [plaintiff] his wife was very sick and she ought to go to the hospital." The answer was, "Yes;" whereupon counsel for defendant (referring to what occurred at the prior trial, and apparently reading from the record thereof) said: "I desire to call the attention of the witness to the next question following the one to which his attention was called, * * * the question being as follows: 'What else did you tell him? * * * Do you remember telling him [the husband] in that conversation what the nature of the trouble was [referring to the wife's ailment]?' " Counsel for plaintiff immediately objected to these offers of what upon the purchase price of realty. Facts agreed upon in the form of a case stated, and judgment entered for plaintiffs for $3,274, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WAL-LING, JJ.

O. C. Bowers, of Chambersburg, for appellant. Charles Walter and Arthur W. Gillan, both of Chambersburg, for appellees.

BROWN, J. [1] Jacob R. Lamaster devised a farm to his son Seth, charged with certain rights and privileges in favor of his wife. After reciting these, he directed as follows:

"Three thousand dollars shall be and remain a charge upon the said lands during the natural life of my wife, Sarah E., and interest upon said sum at 5 per cent. shall be paid to her semi-annually by my son, Seth."

The son executed a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors, and his assignees sold the farm, under an order of court, at public sale. The condition of the sale set forth the foregoing charge, and stated that the purchaser would take title to the farm "subject to the above charge in favor of Sarah E. Lamaster." This was a necessary condition of the sale, for the charge expressly put upon the farm by Jacob R. Lamaster could not be divested by any act of the son, nor by his assignees, even under an order of court authorizing the sale of the property. Helst v. Baker, 49 Pa. 9.

[2] Sarah E. Lamaster purchased the property, and signed an agreement to pay the purchase money "according to the conditions of sale and in all respects to keep and comply with the same." After the sale had been duly confirmed by the court, the assignees tendered her a deed for the property and demanded payment of $16,671.87, the full amount of her bid. This she refused to pay, claiming that there should be deducted from her bid $3,000, the amount of the said charge. The assignees accepted from her $13,671.87, under an agreement that the question of her liability for the full amount of her bid should be submitted to the court below on a case stated. From its judgment, so entered in favor of the assignees for $3,274, the balance of the bid, with interest thereon, Mrs. Lamaster has appealed.

The charge of $3,000 upon the farm was not for the payment of that sum, or any portion of it, on the death of the testator's widow. It was merely to secure to her the payment of $150 annually, and upon her death, if her son should still be the owner of the farm, and he had paid her what was annually due her, the charge would be extinguished; and this would be true, if another should acquire title to the farm from the son. If some one else than his mother had purchased from his assignees, the purchaser would undoubtedly have been required to pay the full amount of his bid, and, in addition thereto, the annual sum of $150 to the widow of the testator, secured to her by the said charge. That she happened to be the purchaser is immaterial in determining her liability for the purchase money. Instead of receiving $150 annually hereafter from another, she will simply pay herself that sum, for, as long as she owns the farm, the hand that pays will be the hand that receives. Neither she nor any one claiming under her will ever be required to pay the principal sum of $3,000, for it and all the other charges expressly placed upon the farm by her husband for her benefit will be extinguished by her death. If she could retain $3,000 of the purchase money, she would get the property for that much less than she unequivocally agreed to pay for it to her son's assignees for the benefit of his creditors. All his interest in the property passed from him when he made the deed of assignment, and there passed to the vendee of his assignees title to the property divested of everything except the charges for the support of his mother during life.

The manifestly correct judgment of the court below is affirmed.

(361 Pa. 574)

McMULLIN v. COMMONWEALTH TITLE INS. & TRUST CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 11, 1918.)

1. INSANE PERSONS §32 — NONRESIDENT LUNATIC—PROPERTY IN STATE JURISDICTION.

A nonresident lunatic does not become a ward in chancery in Pennsylvania because he has property therein, and the powers of its courts go no further than to conserve any property of such lunatic within the state.

2. INSANE PERSONS §43 — NONRESIDENT LUNATIC — APPLICATION FOR TRANSFER OF PROPERTY—STATUTE.

Where guardian of nonresident lunatic, duly declared such by the courts of his state, applies to court of common pleas after full compliance with Act April 13, 1868 (P. L. 94), for order on Pennsylvania committee in charge of lunatic's property to transfer it to guardian, the court has no discretion to refuse application.

3. STATUTES §227—CONSTRUCTION—"MAY."

Whenever an act is done for the benefit of others, the word "may," or its equivalent, simply confers a power or capacity to do the act, and is permissive, and does not necessarily imply an option to abstain from doing the act.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, May.]

4. STATUTES §227—CONSTRUCTION—MANDATORY PROVISIONS.

Whenever a statute authorizes a judicial act in a certain case, it is imperative on those so authorized when the case arises and its exercise is duly applied for by interested party having a right to so apply, and the exercise of authority depends, not on the court's discretion, but on proof of particular case out of which power arises.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

guardian of Harry A. Kern, a nonresident lunatic, against the Commonwealth Title Insurance & Trust Company, committee of Harry A. Kern, for the transfer of funds to the nonresident guardian, under Act April 13, 1868 (P. L. 94). From a decree dismissing the petition, the petitioner appeals. Reversed, petition reinstated, and procedendo awarded.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Norman W. Harker, of Philadelphia, for appellant. James H. Wolfe, of Philadelphia, for appellee.

STEWART, J. The case was heard on petition and answer; the facts are therefore not in dispute, and are thus set out in the petition. One Harry A. Kern, a resident of New Jersey owning property in that state, was by due process of law adjudged in the courts of that state a lunatic, and is now confined in the hospital for the insane at Trenton. The petitioner, a citizen of Moorestown, in said state, has been duly appointed resident guardian of the person and estate of the said lunatic, in attestation and confirmation of which he submits certificates, agreeably to the acts of Congress in such case provided, of such appointment, and that he has given bond for the faithful performance of such trust, approved by the court. The petition further avers that the ward is entitled to certain property in this state at present committed to the care and custody of the Commonwealth Title Insurance & Trust Company, which company was on the 10th of July, 1915, by the common pleas court of Philadelphia appointed committee of the estate of the said lunatic lying and being situate in the state of Pennsylvania; that a removal of this property into the hands of the resident guardian will not conflict with the terms and limitations attending the right by which the lunatic owns the same, and that petitioner has made demand upon the Commonwealth Title Insurance & Trust Company, the committee aforesaid, for a transfer to him of such property, in order that he may remove it to the place of residence of the lunatic and of himself as guardian, he having first filed bond with security in the state of New Jersey in double the amount of the value of the lunatic's property in the state of Pennsylvania the removal of which is sought; concluding with the averment that under and by virtue of the act of April 13, 1868 (P. L. 94), as guardian of the person and estate of the lunatic, he is entitled to remove said property to the place of domicile. Upon this showing the petition prays that a rule issue, directed to the Commonwealth Title Insurance & Trust Company, to show cause why an order should not be entered directing said company to transfer all property of any kind or nature whatsoever under its care or rule so issued the Commonwealth Insurance & Trust Company made submitting the facts, with an importation as to the date of the respondentment as auxiliary or ancilla and guardian; no question is raised strict compliance on the part of with all the requirements of the assembly in such case made and pro the respondent submits the question

"Whether a proper preliminary effort to have the assets of said Pennsylvania transferred to the guardian would not be the obtaining of counting by the legal representative guardian in New Jersey (now the petitioner, the present guardian, New Jersey assets of said estate, so mine whether such transfer of asset essary and for the best interests of the state of said lunatic and of his wife at law."

The issue as thus defined by the was a very narrow one, a pure law, and confined to an inquiry legislative intent in the act of April supra. The learned court below, in the view, urged by respondent, that of April 13, 1868, was not mandatorily with the court having jurisdiction ancillary trusteeship to exercise its in determining whether it would not direct a transfer of the property guardian within this state into the the resident guardian or committee withstanding full compliance on the the petitioner with all the requirements the act in making his demand, in the of its supposed discretionary power and dismissed the plaintiff's petition certiorari followed, which brings the proceeding before us.

The act of April 13, 1868, supra titled: "An act respecting the nonresident lunatics," etc. Section act provides as follows:

"That in all cases where any lunatic committee, guardian, trustee or the both be nonresidents of this state, and natic may be entitled to property or scription in this state, such committee, trustee or the like, on producing satisfactory proof to the court of common pleas of er county, by certificates according to Congress in such cases, that he has g and security in the state in which he natic reside, in double the amount of of the property, as committee, guardian or the like, and it is found that a removal property will not conflict with the terms tations attending the right by which ti owns the same, then any such committee, guardian, trustee, or the like, may demand and remove any such property to the residence of himself and his lunatic."

[14] Dismissing from consideration extraneous grounds upon which a court below rests its adjudication opinion filed, namely, that the estate Jersey had not been wisely or managed, and that a former guardian state, now dead, had not settled his matters not only not appearing in the but wholly irrelevant and over which the courts of this state have no jurisdiction—what is there in the act to suggest that in the disposition of such cases anything is left to the discretion of the court, when the petitioner has complied with every requirement of the act? The learned judge in his opinion leaves us in no doubt as to the considerations which determined the adjudication adverse to the petitioner. We quote from the opinion:

"We think the words, 'such guardian, trustee, or the like, may demand or sue for and remove any such property to the place of residence of himself and his lunatic,' did not divest the court of the inherent power to do that which seems to be for the best interest of the lunatic and the preservation of the estate; we deemed it our duty to exercise our discretion as chancellor, as we have the powers of a court of equity. * * * A lunatic is peculiarly the ward of the court, whose duty it is to see that when deprived of his reason he is cared for and protected and his estate conserved. This has been done in this case."

We simply remark, without further comment, that the learned court was here under misapprehension as to its proper functions in this particular case; the lunatic here was not its ward; it had not adjudged him a lunatic, and could not have done so, had it attempted it, inasmuch as it had no jurisdiction over him, he being resident of another state. He was the ward of a court in another state and that court alone had jurisdiction over his person. It was by virtue of the adjudication of that court that he was legally adjudged a lunatic, and it was upon the certification of that court to the courts of this state that the latter acquired custody and control of the lunatic's property lying within this state. So it is clear that the power of the courts in Pennsylvania went no further than the conservation of such property of the lunatic as was in Pennsylvania. With what was the lunatic's property outside Pennsylvania the courts here were absolutely without jurisdiction; and this must be equally true with respect to the person of the lunatic. Were we to admit the very question in dispute—the discretionary power of the court—that discretion must be confined to a consideration of those facts and circumstances which appertain and belong to the subject over which the court has jurisdiction, and not be allowed to extend to those of a foreign jurisdiction. But we see nothing in the act to justify even such qualified admission; indeed, any admission of this character, however limited, would not only be without warrant, but against rule and precedent as well. The rule is thus laid down in Endlich on the Interpretation of Statutes, § 310, p. 422:

"Whenever the act is to be done for the benefit of others, the word 'may,' or any of its equivalents, simply confers a power or capacity to do the act. It is facultative, not permissive; and neither by its own connotation nor by force of any legal principle does it necessarily imply an option to abstain from doing the act. On the contrary, it is a legal, or rather constitutional principle, that powers given to public functionaries or others for public purposes, or the public benefit, are always to be exercised when the occasion arises. Whether this is to be done by the authorized persons on their own initiative, indeed, or only on the application of those who have a right to the exercise of the power, is a subordinate question which may depend on the language or object of the statute, or on the constitution, whether executive or judicial, of the authorized body of persons, or of their course of practice. But as regards the imperative character of the duty, it was laid down by the King's Bench that words of permission in an act of Parliament, when tending to promote the general benefit, are always held to be compulsory; and as regards courts and judicial functionaries, to act only when applied to. The same rule was in substance restated by the Common Pleas in laying down that whenever a statute confers an authority to do a judicial act (the word 'judicial' being used evidently in its widest sense), in a certain case, it is imperative on those so authorized when the case arises and its exercise is duly applied for by a party interested and having a right to make the application; and that the exercise depends, not on the discretion of the courts or judges, but upon proof of the particular case out of which the power arises. The Supreme Court of the United States similarly laid it down that what public officers are empowered to do for a third person the law requires shall be done whenever the public interests or individual rights call for the exercise of the power; since the latter is not given for their benefit, but for his, and is placed with the depositary to meet the demands of right and prevent the failure of justice. In all such cases, the court observed, the intent of the Legislature, which is the test, is not to devolve a mere discretion, but to impose a positive and absolute duty. There is, therefore, abundant authority for the proposition that such powers as are here under consideration are invariably imperative, and that it is the duty of those to whom they are intrusted to exercise them whenever the occasion contemplated by the Legislature arises."

The case calls for no further discussion or remark. It is quite clear that it is not one calling for the exercise of judicial discretion, but of positive and absolute duty.

The decree of the court below is reversed, the petition is reinstated, and procedendo awarded.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1022(2)—APPROVED AUDITOR'S REPORT—REVIEW.

Where an auditor's findings of fact are based upon sufficient evidence, and are followed by correct legal conclusions, and are approved by the lower court, they will not be disturbed on appeal.

2. WITNESSES ⇨76(2)—WITNESS CALLED BY OBJECTING PARTY—COMPETENCY.

Where a witness is called generally by a party thereafter objecting to his competency, he is thereby rendered competent for either side for all purposes.

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Lycoming County.

In the matter of the estate of Harry W. Lentz, deceased. Exceptions by George W. Lentz and others, and by William P. Beeber and another, surviving executors of the will of J. Artley Beeber, deceased, who had been the executor of the will of Harry W. Lentz, deceased, to the report of James B. Krouse, Esq., auditor in the estate of Harry W. Lentz. From a decree dismissing the exceptions, and confirming the report, the exceptants appeal. Decree affirmed, and appeals dismissed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Wm. W. Porter and Henry K. Fox, both of Philadelphia, and Henry Freedley, of Norristown, for appellants Lentz. S. T. McCormick, Jr., of Williamsport, and Dimmer Beeber, of Philadelphia, for appellees Beeber and Colt.

PER CURIAM. [1, 2] The findings of fact by the learned auditor were all based upon sufficient evidence, and were followed by correct legal conclusions. We have not been convinced that there is any error in his well-considered report, which was properly approved by the court below. In dismissing these cross-appeals nothing more need be said, unless it be to add that when W. P. Beeber was called as a witness generally by those now objecting to his competency, they made him a competent witness for either side for all purposes. Seip v. Storch, 52 Pa. 210, 91 Am. Dec. 148; Bennett v. Williams, 57 Pa. 404.

Decree affirmed, and appeals dismissed, at the costs of the respective appellants.

(261 Pa. 526)

KLEIN-LOGAN CO. v. DUQUESNE LIGHT CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 8, 1918.)

1. PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS ⇨6—JURISDICTION—CONTRACT.

Matters within jurisdiction of Public Service Commission must first be determined by the

2. ELECTRICITY ⇨11—REGULATION OF COURTS—CONTRACT.

Bill in equity to enjoin electric from terminating renewal contract furnishing of electricity at certain properly dismissed, on ground that for Public Service Commission in stance, in view of Public Service Appeal from Court of Common Plegheny County.

Bill for injunction by the Company against the Duquesne pany. From a decree dismissing plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The facts appear from the folll ion by Wasson, J., in the common

This case was set down for argu and answer. The material averm bill are admitted. On October 12 plaintiff and the South Side Electr facturing Company entered into a tract, by the terms of which the l to furnish the former with certain rent for a term of 5 years at a fixed rate per kilowatt hour of se contract contains a provision that piration of the term the customer the privilege of renewal at the sam further period of 5 years by givn notice in writing of such renewal. after the contract had been enter though the exact date is not given, ant took over the property of the Electric & Manufacturing Company after operated the same and furnis under the terms and conditions of t On August 13, 1917, the plaintiff, ceived notice from the defendant th tract would be terminated at the e the term on October 13th, notified ant in writing that the privilege was thereby exercised and the cont be extended for a further period The defendant replied that a renewa be accepted, because neither the fo rate of the old contract were in use, over, the Public Service Company July 26, 1918 [P. L. 1374] requi companies to furnish all service up and standard prices and terms. Se negotiations ensued, when finally the on September 29th, notified the pl it would not continue to supply serv rent after October 15th under the the old contract. The plaintiff's bill upon filed, asking for a preliminary to be afterwards made final, restrain fendant from terminating or attempt minate the contract by shutting off or doing anything to interfere with t ful operation of the plaintiff's plant of electricity which the defendant l to furnish and had theretofore been No preliminary injunction issued; having reached an amicable basis of pending final disposition of the case fendant stood ready at all times to t plaintiff with service according to t rates as set forth in its posted and tariffs, which rates it was maintained just, and reasonable.

[1, 2] The contract in controversy public service company, and deals with service and rates. If the plain titled to relief in any aspect of the sented, it is not in this court under t proceedings. The Public Service La gives the Public Service Commission jurisdiction, in the first instance, t into and regulate the service, rates, fares, tolls, and charges of any and all public service companies. The courts of Pennsylvania no longer have jurisdiction, except upon appeal from a determination by the Public Service Commission. In the most recent deliverance of the Supreme Court in the case of Borough of St. Clair, Appellant, v. Tamaqua & Pottsville Electric Ry. Co. et al., 259 Pa. 462, 103 Atl. 287, in which the borough filed a bill in equity praying that the railway company be restrained from running their cars over a certain designated route, or prohibited from charging more than a five-cent fare thereon, the court says: "Since the Public Service Company Law has been upon our books, we have consistently adhered to the rule that matters within the jurisdiction of the commission must first be determined by it, in every instance, before the courts will adjudge any phase of the controversy (Bethlehem City Water Co. v. Bethlehem Borough, No. 2, 253 Pa. 333, 337, 338 [98 Atl. 646]; New Brighton Borough v. New Brighton Water Co. et al., 247 Pa. 232, 240, 241, 242 [93 Atl. 327]), and it is plain that orderly procedure requires an adherence to this practice; otherwise, different phases of the same case might be pending before the commission and the courts at one time, which would cause endless confusion. Under the established system, the commission, in the first instance, passes upon all changes of rates made by public service corporations, subject to a proper and well-regulated review by the courts, where and when all questions of law may be raised and determined; and this is so, not because the courts have any desire to avoid the performance of duties cast upon them by the law, but because the people, speaking through the Legislature, have declared that these duties shall be performed by a special tribunal created for the purpose."

⇨For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and I

The provisions of the act of 1913, and the ruling of the Supreme Court as above set forth, are sufficient, we believe, to impel us to dismiss the bill, without entering upon any discussion of the merits of the plaintiff's contention that it is entitled to renew the contract of 1912, regardless of the posted and published rates of the defendant company. The plaintiff can present its claim before the Public Service Commission, and, if denied the right of renewal, may then appeal to the courts without prejudice.

The lower court dismissed the bill. Plaintiff appealed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

W. K. Jennings and D. C. Jennings, both of Pittsburgh, for appellant. Edwin W. Smith, A. W. Robertson, and Reed, Smith, Shaw & Beal, all of Pittsburgh, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. This decree is affirmed, at appellant's costs, on the opinion of the learned court below dismissing its bill.

(261 Pa. 605)

SCHLANGER v. BOROUGH OF WEST BERWICK et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 11, 1913.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §904 — TAXPAYER'S BILL—"CLASS BILL."

A taxpayer's bill to enjoin a borough from borrowing money for street improvements is essentially a "class bill," and can only be filed by the common consent of all the taxpayers of the borough.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §992 — TAXPAYER'S BILL — MAINTENANCE OF CLASS BILL—REQUISITES.

To maintain a taxpayer's class bill, the relief sought must be in its nature beneficial to all in the class, and must be intended to prevent the wrongful expenditure of money or the wasting of the assets of the entire class.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §535 — IMPROVEMENTS — CLAIM AGAINST PROPERTY — TAXPAYER'S REMEDY.

Where borough authorities file a municipal claim against a taxpayer's property, his right to defend against a scire facias thereon gives him an adequate remedy at law, aside from an injunction.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Columbia County.

Bill for injunction by Henry Schlanger against the Borough of West Berwick and others. From a decree sustaining a demurrer to the bill and dismissing bill, plaintiff appeals. Decree affirmed, and appeal dismissed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCHISKER, FRAZER, WALLING, and SIMPSON, JJ.

Fred Ikeler and W. S. Sharpless, both of Bloomsburg, for appellant. C. W. Dickson, of Berwick, for appellees.

SIMPSON, J. In the court below, appellant filed a taxpayer's bill, on behalf of himself and such other residents and taxpayers of the borough of West Berwick as might be willing to join in its prosecution, against the borough itself, the officers and members of the borough council, and the borough solicitor. He averred in substance that by a vote of the electors of the borough, and by proper municipal action of the borough council, the borough was authorized to and did borrow the sum of $50,000 for the sole purpose of grading, paving, and curbing certain of the streets of the borough, and had provided for a sufficient annual tax to pay the principal, interest, and tax on said bonds, as they became due; notwithstanding which the defendants proposed to cause assessments to be made upon and to file municipal claims against the abutting properties along said streets, one of which properties was owned by appellant, to pay two-thirds of the total expense of said grading, paving, and curbing; that he was advised that such action was illegal; and he prayed an injunction thereagainst. The defendants demurred, inter alia, because upon the face of the bill it appeared that plaintiff was not entitled to the relief claimed, and because he had an adequate remedy at law. The court below sustained the demurrer and dismissed the bill, whereupon this appeal was taken.

[1, 2] A taxpayer's bill is essentially a class bill and can be filed only in the common interest of all the taxpayers of the municipality, to prevent the wrongful expenditure of the money of the municipality or the wasting of its assets. This bill, however, is not filed to prevent the expenditure of the money of the municipality, but to compel its expenditure for the benefit of plaintiff and the other property owners on said streets only. They are not the only taxpayers of the borough, and the matter is therefore squarely within the principle of Gray v. Chaplin, 2 Sim. & Stew. 267, that—

"In order to enable a plaintiff to sue on behalf of himself and others who stand in the same relation with him to the subject of the suit, it must appear that the relief sought by him is in its nature beneficial to all those whom he undertakes to represent."

That principle is sound, and, so far as we are aware, has never been departed from.

[3] Moreover, if the borough authorities file a municipal claim against appellant's property, his right to defend against a scire facias thereon gives him an adequate remedy at law. Geesey v. City of York, 254 Pa. 397, 99 Atl. 27.

The decree is affirmed, and the appeal dismissed, at the costs of appellant.

(261 Pa. 537)

IN RE KNIGHT'S ESTATE.

Appeal of COMMONWEALTH.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 8, 1918.)

TAXATION \S 895(7)—INHERITANCE TAX—TAXABLE VALUE—DEDUCTION OF FEDERAL INHERITANCE TAX.

In determining amount of decedent's estate subject to collateral inheritance tax, the estate tax imposed by Act Cong. Sept. 8, 1916, should be deducted, as the clear value taxable under Act May 6, 1887 (P. L. 79), can only be ascertained after payment of such tax.

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Philadelphia County.

From a decree dismissing the Commonwealth's exceptions to the adjudication in the estate of T. Morris Knight, deceased, in the matter of a decedent's estate tax, the Commonwealth appeals. Decree affirmed.

The facts appear in the following opinion of Gest, J., in the orphans' court, sur the commonwealth's exception to the adjudication:

The testator died October 6, 1916, so that his estate is subject to the tax imposed by the act of Congress approved September 8, 1916, and the entire estate is also subject to the collateral inheritance tax of this state. The commonwealth claims that this tax must be calculated upon the whole estate, without deduction of the sum of $10,733.97 paid to the United States collector of internal revenue. The auditing judge, however, allowed this deduction, and in this we think he was clearly correct. The act of Congress (39 U. S. Stat. at Large, pt. 1, c. 463, title 2, § 201, page 777 [U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 6336½b]) provides that a tax is thereby imposed upon the transfer of the net estate of every decedent dying after the passage of the act, and the following sections provide for a method of valuation of the gross estate, and the deductions by which the value of the net estate is determined. This tax is in terms a tax imposed upon the transfer of the net estate of a decedent passing to others under the provisions of his will or the intestate laws of the several states. It is denominated an estate tax, not a tax upon the succession or inheritance, and it is charged upon and payable out of the net estate of the decedent. It is imposed without regard to the provisions of the will or the law of the several states, the paramount taxing power of the federal government takes effect at the moment of the owner's death upon his entire estate, subject only to the specific deductions mentioned in section 203 (section 6336½d), and an exemption of $50,000, and it requires payment therefrom of a tax according to a graduated scale, regulated by the net amount of the taxable estate.

The collateral inheritance tax imposed by the act of May 6, 1887 (P. L. 79), provides that all estates passing from any person who may die seized or possessed of such estates to any person or persons or body corporate or politic, in trust or otherwise, other than to or for the use of a father, mother, wife, children, etc., shall be and they are thereby made subject to a tax of $5 on every $100 of the "clear value" of said estate or estates, and at and after the same rate for any less amount, to be paid to the use of the commonwealth. In the recent cases of Van Bell's Estate and Otto's Estate, 257 Pa. 155, 101 Atl. 316, the Supreme Court held that the collateral inheritance tax imposed by our state is upon the "clear value" of the property or estate passing to the legatee or devisee, and consequently the transfer tax imposed by the law of New Jersey, and thereby made a charge on the stock of its corporations belonging to a resident or nonresident passing by will or the intestate law, must be deducted, in order to ascertain the clear value of the estate liable for collateral inheritance tax.

The decision in that case makes it unnecessary for us to enter upon any elaborate discussion of the present. The tax which the commonwealth exacts is 5 per cent. of the clear value of all estates passing from the person dying possessed thereof to any other persons other than those specifically exempted, and every legal charge against the estate must therefore be deducted before the clear value can be ascertained. Obviously the clear value taxable under the law of this state can only be thus ascertained after the payment of the tax due to the United States. As Judge Solly, of the orphans' court of Montgomery county, well says in Bell's Estate, 34 Montg. 9: "Otherwise a legatee, devisee, or heir, or next of kin is paying the commonwealth a tax upon something which has not passed and never will pass to him. Such a result would be unjust and highly inequitable and shocking to one's sense of reason and justice." Indeed, a case might readily be imagined where concurrent taxation at a high rate might absorb the entire estate, which would then become almost like the hereditas damnosa of the early Roman law.

This argument is not answered by reference to the decisions holding that the collateral inheritance tax is technically a tax on the right of succession, for the question recurs: What is the thing to which the right of succession attaches? And that is clearly the estate which passes after it is diminished by the deduction of the federal tax. It is not necessary for us to consider the decisions in other states. The view here adopted is in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts in Hooper v. Shaw, 176 Mass. 190, 57 N. E. 361, under the federal Revenue Act of June 13, 1898 (30 Stat. 448, c. 448), while the contrary opinion is maintained in New York (Re Bierstadt, 173 App. Div. 836, 166 N. Y. Supp. 168, following earlier cases in that state). In our state, Judge Solly, of the orphans' court of Montgomery county, in Bell's Estate, 34 Montg. 9, and Judge Copeland, of the orphans' court of Westmoreland county, in Keister's Estate, 85 Lanc. Law

R. 49, have carefully examined this question, and have arrived at the same conclusion as ourselves.

The court dismissed the exception. The commonwealth appealed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, FRAZER, MOSCHZISKER, and WALLING, JJ.

Edwin S. Ward, of Philadelphia, and William M. Hargest, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Francis Shunk Brown, Atty. Gen., for the Commonwealth. George C. Krewson, of Philadelphia, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. The decree in this case is affirmed, at the cost of the commonwealth, on the opinion of the learned court below disallowing its claim.

(261 Pa. 458)

TAYLOR v. CITY OF PHILADELPHIA et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 3, 1918.)

1. STATUTES §81—LOCAL OR SPECIAL LAWS—REGULATION OF LABOR.

Act July 6, 1917 (P. L. 752), authorizing municipalities to provide by ordinance or contract that any part or all of work on public buildings shall be done within municipal limits, is a special act violating Const. art. 3, § 7, forbidding special legislation regulating labor or trade.

2. STATUTES §92—MUNICIPALITIES—CLASSIFICATION.

Classification as to governmental functions is valid on ground that legislation adapted to one municipality may be wholly unsuited to another, but as to private undertakings in which state has no concern the same reason for classification does not exist, and test as to legislation as to private corporations must apply.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §111(3)—ORDINANCES—"LAWS"—LOCAL OR SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

Ordinances are not "laws" within Const. art. 3, § 7, prohibiting local or special legislation.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Law.]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §336(4)—PUBLIC WORK—AWARD TO LOWEST BIDDER.

Ordinance of city of Philadelphia, requiring contracts for construction of public buildings to specify obligation of departments to have stone cutting done in city and that proposals shall so specify, violates Act May 23, 1874 (P. L. 230), in so far as compliance would result in award to other than lowest responsible bidder.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Bill in equity for injunction by Walter R. Taylor against the City of Philadelphia and others. Demurrer to bill sustained and bill dismissed, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and record remitted, with direction to reinstate the bill with a procedendo.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MESTREZAT, POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

W. B. Linn, F. C. Newbourg, Jr., H. B. Gill, and J. De F. Junkin, all of Philadelphia, for appellant. John P. Connelly, Joseph G. Magee, and Ernest Lowengrund, all of Philadelphia, for appellees.

FRAZER, J. Plaintiff, a resident and taxpayer of Philadelphia, filed his bill for an injunction against the city of Philadelphia, the trustees of the Free Library of Philadelphia, and the firm of John Gill & Sons, contractors, and others, to restrain the execution of a contract for the construction of a public library. The court below sustained a demurrer to the bill, and this appeal followed.

The city, in conjunction with the trustees of the Free Library of Philadelphia, advertised for bids for the construction of a new library building; the specifications containing a clause that "bidders must fully acquaint themselves with all the legal and departmental regulations applying to contract work in the city of Philadelphia," and calling attention to a provision for allowance of credit to the city to be deducted from the amount of the contract price if "legally permissible to have the stone cut at any place, so that the said cutting be not limited to the city of Philadelphia." Attached to the proposal was a copy of an ordinance approved November 26, 1894, providing that "in all contracts * * * for the construction of public buildings, * * * it shall be specified that the work of cutting and preparing such stone for use shall be done in Philadelphia," together with an amendment approved December 28, 1895, extending the provisions of the earlier ordinance "to all stone entering into work done under contract with the city of Philadelphia, making it obligatory on departments to have all stone used in municipal work cut and prepared in Philadelphia, and proposals for work into which said stone enters shall be so worded as to inform intending bidders of the provisions of this ordinance." Each ordinance also contains a clause providing the cost of cutting stone "shall not be in excess of the price paid labor for like work under private contract in the city of Philadelphia." The two lowest bidders for the work were George A. Fuller & Co. and John Gill & Sons; the bid of the former being $2,570,000, subject to a deduction of $155,000 if the provision of the ordinance requiring the stone to be cut in the city of Philadelphia were eliminated. The bid of the latter was $2,535,000, with a deduction of $110,000 if the provision as to the place of cutting stone should be excluded. The bid of John Gill & Sons for $2,535,000 was accepted as being the lowest responsible bid for work done within the city of Philadelphia. The bid of Fuller & Co. is lower, however, if the requirement as to the place of cutting stone be eliminated, and plaintiff now claims the contract was not awarded the lowest responsible bidder as required by law, contending the ordinances above mentioned, phia, are invalid.

[1, 2] The act of 1917 (section 1) provides it shall be lawful for a municipality, or subdivision thereof, "in the construction of any building or the performance of any public work, to provide, by ordinance, municipal regulation, or contract, that any portion or all of the work on the said building, or the work on the said public improvement, shall be done within the territorial limits of the said city, county, township, borough, or other municipal division or subdivision for which the said work is being performed." By section 2 of the act all ordinances, regulations, or contracts theretofore made requiring any portion of public work to be done within the territorial limits of the municipality "are hereby validated." If the act is a proper exercise of legislative power, a consideration of the validity of the ordinances of 1894 and 1895, above referred to, will be unnecessary, since, whether valid or not before the act of 1917, they, as well as any contracts executed pursuant to their authority, were validated by that act; the rule being that the Legislature may confirm that which it might have previously authorized. Donley v. Pittsburgh, 147 Pa. 348, 23 Atl. 394, 30 Am. St. Rep. 738.

Plaintiff contends the Act of July 6, 1917 (P. L. 752), is local or special legislation within the meaning of article 3, § 7, of the Constitution, regulating labor, trade, mining, or manufacturing. A careful examination of the act in view of the decision of this court in Commonwealth v. Casey, 231 Pa. 170, 80 Atl. 78, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 767, leads to the conclusion this contention is well founded and should be sustained. While the act is not local as to place, but applies to all municipalities, no adequate reason has been given for placing municipalities in a class with respect to the place of performing work or preparing materials incident to contracts for the erection of public buildings, so as to prevent the act being special in respect to its subject within the meaning of the above provision of the Constitution. The subject-matter of the statute does not relate to the exercise of a governmental power or function of the municipality in which it acts as representative or agent of the state in carrying out the purpose of local government for which it was created, but deals with functions which concern only local business and matters with respect to which the state is not interested, and in the performance of which the municipality should be regarded merely as a private corporation with the corresponding powers and duties incident to such bodies. Classification with respect to governmental functions has been uniformly held proper on the ground that legislation adapted to one municipality may be totally unsuited to another by reason municipality, and in view of the same reason, the same reason cannot exist, and the standard test applicable to government of private subject was fully discussed in Casey, supra, where in 1897 (P. L. 418), regulations men employed by the ties, was held a special § 7, of the Constitution trade, mining, and though its provisions palities of the state. 179, 80 Atl. 81, 34 L.

"It is impossible to between municipal corporations that would make number of hours to be for one class, unsuitable no pretense that there So far as labor is concerned in the construction of vate enterprises of like

The present act requires "any portion or all of ings" shall be done. pressly mention material parent objects of the move the doubt as to nances such as those stone to be cut in the act be construed as a tion of materials in actual work of construction building is impossible the borders of the municipality may require done within its boundaries tend this requirement supplies and provide manufacture within it impossible from the construction would result in trade, and manufacturing, be special meaning of the Constitution

[3, 4] The act of 191 remains to consider the nances themselves. which the act of 1917 cannot apply because laws within the meaning al provisions prohibiting isolation. Baldwin v. 184; Davis v. Homestead Ct. 444; McCormick v. Pa. 190, 24 Atl. 667. question is whether the provisions of the Act L. 230), and of June quiring all work and the city under contract est responsible bidder raised, but not decided delphia, 258 Pa. 355, 10

The right of a municipality to require work on materials to be done within the city limits has not been directly passed upon by the appellate courts of this state, and we find the decisions of other states are not in harmony; their general trend, however, is to hold such requirement invalid where its tendency is to conflict with statutory provisions requiring contracts to be let to the lowest responsible bidder. A case in point, identical in principle, though not on its facts, is Frame v. Felix, 167 Pa. 47, 81 Atl. 375, 27 L. R. A. 802, where this court held a provision in the specifications of a municipal contract requiring the contractor to employ no one not a citizen of the United States and to pay not less than a stipulated wage per day to be inconsistent with the Act of May 23, 1889 (P. L. 277), providing that municipal work be let to the lowest responsible bidder. In Commonwealth v. Casey, supra, the Act of July 26, 1897 (P. L. 418), fixing eight hours as a day's work for men employed by a municipality, was held to be special legislation, and consequently unconstitutional. In People ex rel. Rodgers v. Coler, 166 N. Y. 1, 59 N. E. 716, 52 L. R. A. 814, 82 Am. St. Rep. 605, and People ex rel. Treat v. Coler, 166 N. Y. 144, 59 N. E. 776, referred to by counsel in argument, a statute somewhat similar to the ordinance here in question was held void because it invaded rights of liberty and property and also conflicted with the commerce clause of the federal Constitution (article 1, § 8, cl. 3). No question was there raised as to the violation by a municipality of a state law requiring contracts to be let to the lowest responsible bidder. In Allen v. Labsap, 188 Mo. 692, 87 S. W. 926, 3 Ann. Cas. 306, an ordinance of the city of St. Louis, requiring the work of dressing stone used in municipal contracts to be done within the limits of the state, was held valid. While the city charter in that case contained a provision requiring the work of public improvements to be let to the lowest responsible bidder, the court found, as a matter of fact, the restriction did not increase the cost of the improvement. In its opinion the court said (188 Mo. 701, 87 S. W. 928, 3 Ann. Cas. 306):

"If the ordinance tended to prevent competition and to increase the price, they [the appellants] have suffered injury and have cause of complaint."

In St. Louis Quarry & Construction Co. v. Von Versen, 81 Mo. App. 519, where a similar question arose under the same ordinance and it appeared compliance with its requirement had in fact increased the cost, the ordinance was held to conflict with the provisions of the city charter requiring work to be let to the lowest responsible bidder. In Gemmell's Case, 20 Idaho, 732, 119 Pac. 298, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 711, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 76, a statute requiring public printing and binding and stationery work to be done within the state and county where used was held valid, and the same rule was followed in Tribune Printing & Binding Co. v. Barnes, 7 N. D. 591, 75 N. W. 904, where there was in existence a statute requiring contracts to be let to the lowest bidder; but it was said in the latter case (7 N. D. 596, 75 N. W. 906) that such provision "must be construed with reference to the requirement embraced in section 1807, Revised Codes [requiring all county printing to be done in the state and if practicable in the county ordering the same], and therefore that the competitive bidding must be restricted to those who can and will do the work within the state. The last-mentioned section became a law later in point of time, and, by its terms, necessarily modifies the earlier enactment." The last two cases were both regulations by statute and not by ordinance, and the Dakota case was one of a subsequent statute modifying an earlier one. Neither was an instance of a municipal ordinance containing provisions conflicting with express enactments of an earlier statute.

An act of the Legislature can, of course, be modified by the Legislature itself. No case has been found which is direct authority to sustain the validity of municipal ordinances such as are here in question where the effect is to conflict with an express statutory provision requiring contracts to be let to the lowest responsible bidder. That the cost here has been increased because of the ordinances cannot be disputed in view of the difference in the bids of both contestants. From what has been said the judgment of the court below must be reversed.

The judgment is reversed, and the record is remitted, with directions that the bill be reinstated with a procedendo.

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ↔705(1)—COL-LISION—DUTY OF DRIVER OF AUTOMOBILE—INSTRUCTION.

In action for injury sustained by pedestrian, when struck by defendant's automobile moving in the same direction on an avenue, instruction that it was defendant's duty to use all possible care to avoid collision was erroneous.

2. TRIAL ↔243—CONFUSING INSTRUCTIONS.

In action for injury sustained by plaintiff pedestrian, when struck by defendant's automobile, instruction that driver of automobile must use all possible care to avoid injuring pedestrian and instruction that he must use the care of an ordinarily prudent man are confusing and misleading.

3. NEW TRIAL ↔39—GROUNDS—ERRONEOUS INSTRUCTIONS.

In action for injury sustained by plaintiff pedestrian, when struck by defendant's automobile moving in the same direction on an avenue, instructing that it was defendant's duty to use all possible care to avoid collision was such error as entitles defendant to new trial.

4. TRIAL ↔250—INSTRUCTIONS NOT SUPPORTED BY ALLEGATION AND PROOF.

Where plaintiff's declaration alleged that she was struck by defendant's automobile, and her testimony was to that effect, an instruction authorizing recovery, if her companion was struck in such way as to result in her injury, was erroneous.

5. DAMAGES ↔216(7)—FUTURE PAIN AND SUFFERING—INSTRUCTION.

Instruction as to recovery for future pain and suffering held objectionable, where it did not explain that to warrant such recovery future pain or suffering must be reasonably certain to follow injury.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ↔1050(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—TESTIMONY ALREADY GIVEN.

Where testimony that plaintiff was nervous had been introduced without objection, permitting her physician to testify that she was generally nervous, and complained of loss of sleep, was without error.

Exceptions from Superior Court, Kent County; Edward W. Blodgett, Judge.

Action by Bertha Greenhalch against Thomas H. Barber. Verdict for plaintiff, motion for new trial denied, and defendant brings exceptions. Case remitted, with directions to grant new trial.

Quinn & Kernan, of Providence, for plaintiff. Wayne H. Whitman, Waterman & Greenlaw, and Charles E. Tilley, all of Providence, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. This is an action of trespass on the case for negligence, which was tried before a jury, and which resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff for $900. The defendant's motion for a new trial was denied by the trial justice, and the case is now before this court upon the defendant's bill of exceptions by which objection is taken to certain rulings of the trial justice specified therein.

The plaintiff, on the 9th day of March, 1917, between 8 and 9 o'clock p. m., was walking on West Warwick. Warwick avenue is a state highway which runs approximately east and west. The highway is macadamized in the center, and at either side of the macadam there is the ordinary dirt surface, but there is no sidewalk. The plaintiff testifies that she was walking in a westerly direction on the left-hand side of the avenue, and that her companion, Mr. Carr, was walking on her right-hand side, between her and the macadam part of the road; that while in this part of the highway she was struck by an automobile operated by the defendant, which came from behind her; that she did not see the automobile, or hear any warning signal; that the automobile struck her on her right hip and dragged her on the ground a distance of about 30 feet, inflicting certain injuries for which suit was brought; that she did not see what happened to her companion, Mr. Carr; and that when she first realized anything after being struck she was lying on her face on the ground.

Defendant testified that he saw the plaintiff and her companion on the right-hand side of the road ahead of him, and that he was then 100 or 150 feet distant from them; that he blew his horn and turned to the left to pass them, but, before he reached them, they crossed to the left side of the road, and he then swung his automobile to the right in order to pass them; that he was going 12 or 15 miles an hour when he first saw them; that his automobile simply touched the man, who was on the right-hand side of the plaintiff, and that he stopped within 5 or 6 feet after touching him; that the man was not knocked down, and that the automobile did not run into the plaintiff at all; and that she was not knocked down and dragged in the highway, as she claimed.

The only witnesses at the trial who testified in regard to the accident were the plaintiff and the defendant. Mr. Carr did not appear as a witness, and his absence, as claimed by the plaintiff, was due to the fact that he was out of the state, in the United States naval service, at the time of the trial. The court charged the jury in part as follows:

"Now, I will charge you, gentlemen, that as a matter of law it was the duty of the driver of the automobile, when he observed people walking in the highway in front of his machine, in the first place to give a warning by blowing his horn, or by such signal as is provided for giving warning on his automobile. It is also his duty to use all possible care not to collide with these people who are walking."

In another part of the charge the court also instructed the jury:

"It is for you to determine—and it is the first point that you will have to determine—as to whether he did use such care as an ordinarily prudent man, using a dangerous vehicle, like an automobile, should use in all these circumstances and under the testimony as it has been disclosed to you."

At the conclusion of the charge the defendant took exception to that part of the charge in which the court stated:

"It is also his duty to use all possible care not to collide with these people who are walking."

[1-3] We think that the action of the court in failing to correct the charge was error. From the quotation already made, it is apparent that the court had in mind the correct rule of law; that is, that the defendant was only bound to use such care as an ordinarily prudent man, using a dangerous vehicle, like an automobile, should use in all the circumstances. The defendant was not bound to use all possible care to avoid a collision, and the instruction to this effect was clearly erroneous. The instructions in regard to the duty of care on the part of the defendant were conflicting and confusing. The attention of the court was called to the error complained of, and an opportunity was thus given to the court to correct the error, and the refusal of the court to modify the charge as suggested by the defendant was error of such character that we think that the defendant is entitled to a new trial.

[4] The attorney for the defendant requested the court to charge the jury that, if the plaintiff was not struck by the defendant's automobile, the verdict must be for the defendant. The court refused to make this charge as requested, but did charge as follows:

"Of course, that is an issue in the case. Mr. Barber claims that he did not hit her at all. She claims she was hit. Of course, if he didn't hit her directly, that is one thing; but if she were in such a position, and you should so find from the testimony, in walking with her companion, that it was the blow to her companion that caused her injury, then I would charge you that, in case you find that he was guilty of negligence in striking her companion, he would be liable for any injuries she may have suffered from that blow."

The exception of the defendant to this particular part of the charge must also be sustained. The plaintiff in her declaration alleged that she was struck by the automobile, and dragged along the ground as a result thereof, and her testimony was to that effect. There was no claim made by the plaintiff, nor was there any evidence which would warrant the finding, that it was the blow to her companion which caused the plaintiff's injury. The effect of this part of the charge was to authorize the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff on a state of facts neither alleged nor proved by her. The issue in the case was clearly an issue of veracity between the plaintiff and the defendant, and we think that the part of the charge last referred to was erroneous in the circumstances.

[5] The defendant also excepts to the following part of the charge in regard to damages:

"I have already charged you that you are entitled to give her such damages as you believe she has proved for such pain and suffering as you think she will undergo in the future."

Defendant, in stating his exception, said:

"We claim that, to recover for future injuries or suffering, it must be reasonably certain under the testimony to follow."

This part of the charge should have been explained to the jury as requested by the defendant, although, if this were the only objection to the charge, we should not deem it of sufficient gravity to warrant a new trial.

[6] Defendant also claims that the trial court erred in the admission of certain testimony of Dr. Chagnon. Plaintiff's counsel asked the doctor in regard to his client's general nervous condition, to which the doctor replied that she was generally nervous, and complained of loss of sleep. To this testimony the defendant objected, on the ground that no claim had been made in the bill of particulars filed in the case in regard to any nervous condition. We do not consider this objection of much weight, as the testimony evidently had reference to a temporary, rather than a permanent, condition of nervousness. There had been other testimony that the plaintiff was nervous, which had been given without objection by the defendant, and we do not find any error in the ruling complained of.

For the reasons stated, the case is remitted to the superior court, with direction to grant a new trial to the defendant.

(39 N. J. Eq. 334)

WATTERS et al. v. MAYOR AND COMMON COUNCIL OF BAYONNE et al.

(No. 45/282.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. Sept. 17, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EQUITY §263—ANSWER IN LIEU OF PLEA—MOTION TO STRIKE.

The legal sufficiency of a defense, which under the old practice would have been presented by a plea, and which would be tested by setting down the plea for hearing, is now properly tested under rules 67, 68, and 75 (100 Atl. xii, xiii) by motion to strike out the answer filed in lieu of plea, or that portion of the answer raising the defense.

2. INJUNCTION §88—EXPENDITURE OF PUBLIC MONEY—EXCESSIVE AMOUNT.

The rule is established for this court that, where the price to be paid by a municipality is so excessive as to shock the conscience, the court may properly interfere by injunction to save the municipality's money from willful waste or fraudulent diversion. McKinley v. Freeholders of Union County, 29 N. J. Eq. 164; McCormick v. New Brunswick, 83 N. J. Eq. 1, 89 Atl. 1084.

3. INJUNCTION §87—ISSUE OF BONDS—USE OF PROCEEDS.

The provisions of subdivision 3 of section 2 of chapter 252 of the Laws of 1916 (P. L. p. 525), as amended by chapter 240, § 2, of the Laws of 1917 (P. L. p. 803), commonly known as the Pierson Act, and which act is designed to provide for a uniform method of issuing bonds by municipalities, and which subdivision provides that after 20 days after the publication of the statement referred to in the act the ordinance or resolution shall be conclusively presumed to have been duly and regularly passed and to comply with the provisions of the act, or any other act, and that the validity of such ordinance or resolution should not be questioned, except in a suit commenced prior to the expiration of such 20 days, do not prevent a court of equity from, after the expiration of the 20 days, enjoining the municipality from using the proceeds of bonds in the manner contemplated by the provisions of its ordinance, nor from enjoining the issuance of the bonds, and answers filed in lieu of plea setting up the expiration of the 20-day period will be stricken out as presenting no defense.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ~~§~~ 17(2)—ISSUANCE OF BONDS—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

The purpose of the provisions of the subdivision is to prevent an attack which will affect the validity of the bonds issued under the act, and such is not the effect of the proceedings referred to.

Bill by William Watters and another against the Mayor and Common Council of Bayonne and others. On motion to strike out answers filed by defendants in lieu of pleas. Granted, with leave to file answers on the merits within 10 days.

Robert Carey, of Jersey City, for complainants. James Benny, of Bayonne, and Gilbert Collins, of Jersey City, for defendants.

LANE, V. C. [1] This is a motion to strike out answers filed by defendants in lieu of pleas. Under the old practice the defense would be set up by pleas, and the pleas would be set down for hearing to test their legal sufficiency. Under the present practice the objection is made by motions to strike out. Rules 67, 68, and 75 (100 Atl. xii, xiii). The question is whether the answers present a legal defense.

[2-4] The bill is filed upon the authority of McKinley v. Chosen Freeholders of Union County, 29 N. J. Eq. 164, and McCormick v. Mayor and Common Council of the City of New Brunswick, 83 N. J. Eq. 1, 89 Atl. 1034, to enjoin the city of Bayonne from purchasing a waterworks system at a price alleged to be so excessive as to shock the conscience. In such a case the Chancellor, in McCormick v. New Brunswick, said that this court might properly interfere by injunction to save the city's money from willful waste or fraudulent diversion. The answers set up that proceedings were taken by the city under the provisions of chapter 252 of the Laws of 1916 (P. L. 1916, p. 525), as amended by chapter 240 of the Laws of 1917 (P. L. 1917, p. 806), to raise moneys, through a bond issue, for the purchase of the waterworks, and that all proceedings were in strict accordance with the act, and that more than 20 days having elapsed after the publication of the statement signed by the clerk in accordance with the provisions of section 2 before the commencement of this suit, the complainant is barred under the provisions of section 2, subdivision 3, from questioning the validity of the ordinance or of any bonds issued in accordance therewith.

No bonds have actually been issued, nor do I think it would make any difference if they had been. The purpose of the act, commonly called the Pierson Act, is to provide for a uniform method of issuing bonds by municipalities. The purpose of subdivision 3 of section 2 is to prevent any action after the expiration of the 20-day period which would cast a cloud upon the validity of the bonds. It is true that subdivision 3 forbids an attack upon the ordinance or resolution after the expiration of the period fixed which ordinance or resolution, in the language of the subdivision, shall be conclusively presumed to have been duly and regularly passed, and to comply with the provisions of this or any other act. The ordinance or resolution referred to, however, will be found by reference to the act to be an ordinance or resolution authorizing the issuance of bonds, not an ordinance or resolution authorizing the making of the improvement, or what not, for which the proceeds of the bonds are to be used. While the ordinance in the instant case authorizing the purchase of the waterworks was incorporated in the same document as the ordinance authorizing the issuance of bonds, there is in reality two distinct steps in the procedure.

My conclusion is that the provisions of subdivision 3, section 2, prevents only an attack upon the regularity and validity of so much of the ordinance as provides for the issuance of bonds. Assuming that the ordinance providing for the issuance of bonds has been regularly passed and is valid, and that any bonds issued under it would be valid obligations of the municipality, there is nothing, I think, which will prevent a court of equity from enjoining the city from using the proceeds of the bonds in such manner as will violate any equitable right of the inhabitants of the municipality. Nor do I think that, assuming the regularity and validity of the ordinance directing the issuance of bonds and that the city has the power to issue the bonds, there is anything to prevent a court of equity from enjoining the municipality from exercising the power which it has derived through the passage of the ordinance in an unconscionable manner, and that therefore, if the bonds have not yet been issued, their issue may be restrained, notwithstanding that the period provided for in subdivision 3 of section 2 within which an attack must be made upon the ordinance has expired. By so holding, the rights of holders of bonds issued under the act will be fully protected, and yet the court will not be precluded from preventing a fraudulent diversion of funds. In many cases the fraud may not be discovered, or be discoverable, until after the expiration of the short period fixed by the statute.

I will advise an order striking out the answers filed in lieu of pleas, and giving defendants 10 days within which to file answers on the merits. Will counsel kindly present orders at once.

(89 N. J. Eq. 245)

LAWRENCE v. PROSSER.

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. Aug. 12, 1918.)

1. CHARITIES §10—REQUEST TO ERECT MONUMENT—VALIDITY.

Testatrix might lawfully give her residuary estate in money to a town in the state of Maine for the erection of a monument to the memory of her brother, a prominent citizen of that town.

2. CHARITIES §20(5) — POWER TO ACCEPT REQUEST—COMMON AND STATUTE LAW.

Under the common law, as well as under the express statute law of the state of Maine, the town of Bucksport, Me., had capacity to receive a residuary gift of money and apply it as directed by testatrix to the erection of a monument to the memory of her brother, a prominent citizen of that town.

3. CHARITIES §23—REQUEST FOR ERECTION OF MONUMENT—VALIDITY—DISCRETION.

A residuary bequest of money to a town for the erection of a monument to the memory of testatrix's brother, a prominent citizen of the town, otherwise valid, was not invalid because testatrix left the site and details to the discretion of the proper town authorities.

4. PERPETUITIES §7(1)—REQUEST TO CONSTRUCT MONUMENT.

A residuary bequest of money to a town for construction of a monument to the memory of testatrix's brother was not subject to the rule against perpetuities, unless the construction was postponed to a period exceeding a life or lives in being and 21 years.

Bill by one Lawrence against Judson C. Prosser, executor of the will of Mrs. Emma H. Dean, deceased. Decree for complainant.

See, also, 101 Atl. 1040.

The will of Mrs. Emma H. Dean, after giving certain legacies, including a life interest, and directing the conversion of her property into cash for investment, provided as follows:

"After the death of said Luman Warren Lawrence I order and direct the said Judson C. Prosser to turn over to the town of Bucksport, Maine, the balance of said sum, including all interest, accumulations and additions thereto, less the amount paid during the lifetime of the said Luman Warren Lawrence and less the disbursements of the said Judson C. Prosser and his commissions for carrying out his duties as trustee and executor, as hereinafter mentioned; the said sum to be received by the town of Bucksport, Maine, aforesaid, to be used by it for the express purpose of erecting a monument to the memory of my brother Luman Warren; the site of said monument and the details thereof to be left to the judgment and discretion of the proper town authorities."

Scott German, Frank E. Bradner, and Robert H. McCarter, all of Newark, for complainant. Theodore D. Gottlieb and Hugh B.

Reed, both of Newark, for executor. Edward Q. Keasbey, of Newark, for town of Bucksport.

STEVENS, V. C. This seems to be a very simple case. The only question is whether Mrs. Dean could lawfully give her residuary estate to the town of Bucksport, for the erection of a monument to the memory of her brother, a prominent citizen of that town.

[1] First. Could she lawfully give it for that purpose? That she could is decided in Detwiller v. Hartman, 37 N. J. Eq. 347. The decisions are all one way, and the very cases relied upon by complainants' counsel (In re Ogden, 25 R. I. 373, 55 Atl. 938; In re Fancher, 156 Cal. 13, 103 Pac. 206, 23 L. R. A. [N. S.] 944, 19 Ann. Cas. 1157) assume that the right exists.

[2] Second. Has the town of Bucksport capacity to receive the gift and apply it as directed? In the recent case of Guild v. Newark, 87 N. J. Eq. 38, 99 Atl. 120, I had occasion to consider the right of the city of Newark to accept a gift of land for a park. I came to the conclusion that a municipal corporation had, by the common law, without the aid of statute, power to take such a devise. "Not only," it was said, "may municipal corporations take and hold the property in their own right by direct gift, conveyance, or devise, but the cases firmly establish the principle that such corporations, at least in this country, are capable, unless specially restrained, of taking property, real or personal, in trust for purposes germane to the objects of the corporation."

When one considers that civilized communities have in all ages adorned their ways and parks with memorials of the illustrious dead, it is idle to assert that columns and statuary have no proper place in them. Whether, without legislative authority, a municipality may or may not spend, upon objects of this character, money raised by taxation, it is certain that it may take them by gift or bequest. Libby v. City of Portland, 105 Me. 374, 74 Atl. 805, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 141, 18 Ann. Cas. 547.

The town of Bucksport has not only this common law right; it has legislative sanction besides. The Maine statute (Rev. St. c. 4, § 82) provides that—

"Any city or town may receive money by donation or legacy in trust for benevolent, religious or educational purposes, for the erection of and maintenance of monuments, and for the benefit of public cemeteries and lots therein; provided that the city or town lawfully consents."

By the laws of this state, therefore, the testatrix has the right to make, and by the laws of the state of Maine, Bucksport has the right to receive a gift of this character.

[3] I will notice briefly some of the objections made to its validity. It is said that the choice of the site and the details of the work are left to the discretion of the town, and Atl. 1069. It is obvious that the discretion here given is not wider than that which, in a gift of this kind is generally and necessarily given. If testator directs a house to be built for his widow or child, or a portrait to be painted, is the direction 'invalidated because he leaves the details of the work to the discretion of the person to whom it is committed?

[4] Again, it is said that the bequest is void, because it violates the rule against perpetuities. The will directs the money to be applied not for maintenance, but for construction and construction only. To the case of such a bequest the law of perpetuities can have no application unless the construction be postponed to a period exceeding a life or lives in being and 21 years. There is a palpable fallacy underlying much of complainants' argument on this head. It is that, because a monument is likely to last beyond the legal period, the case is one of perpetuity. The same might be said of any structure likely to endure. The case of Morristown Trust Co. v. Morristown, 82 N. J. Eq. 521, 91 Atl. 736, is appealed to. Testator made a bequest of money for the bronze and granite base of a flag staff in a public park. Howell, V. O., held that it was void. The case was correctly decided, for the base was to be built with the consent of the trustees of the park, and this consent was refused. That was the main ground of decision. The statement, no doubt inadvertently made, that the gift infringed upon the rule against perpetuities, was obviously erroneous, if the structure was to be completed and handed over within the legal time.

A considerable part of the argument was devoted to the question of the meaning of the word "monument." Does it mean a shaft, or a statue, or does it mean a building like a library or town hall, that would come within the definition of a charity? In the view I have taken the question is not now material. Whether testatrix intended a charity or not, her gift was to have its full effect within the legal period, and so in either aspect is valid.

(79 N. H. 75)

RICHMOND v. TOWN OF BETHLEHEM.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Grafton. Oct. 1, 1918.)

1. TRIAL \S 260(1)—INSTRUCTIONS—REFUSAL OF REQUESTS.

Exceptions to denial of instructions, substantially included in charge given, cannot be sustained.

2. TRIAL \S 252(8)—INSTRUCTIONS NOT SUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE—REFUSAL.

Where it did not appear at what rate of speed deceased's automobile was going when it went over the embankment, where there was no railing, instruction based upon assumption that automobile was going from 15 to 20 miles per hour was error. HIGHWAYS \S 18(1)—DEFECTIVE HIGHWAYS—ACTION FOR INJURIES—"TRAVELER." Under Laws 1915, c. 48, making a town liable to one injured while traveling upon a highway because of defect rendering it unsuitable for travel, deceased, who was driving his automobile upon highway of defendant town, was a "traveler," in a general sense and also in a method approved by chapter 129. [Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Traveler on Highway.]

Transferred from Superior Court, Grafton County; Kivel, Judge.

Action by Edwin F. Richmond, administrator, against the Town of Bethlehem. Verdict for plaintiff, and defendant brings exceptions. Transferred from superior court. Exceptions overruled.

Case for negligence. Trial by jury, and verdict for the plaintiff. The plaintiff's intestate was driving in his automobile upon the highway of the defendant between Littleton and Whitefield, when in order to avoid an obstacle in the road he ran his automobile into a ditch on the north side of the road, and, coming out of that, the automobile went across the road and fell over an unrailled embankment on the south side of the highway, and he was killed. An exception which appears in the opinion was taken by the defendant to the refusal of the court to give requested instructions.

Edward J. Cummings, of Littleton, and Martin & Howe, of Concord, for plaintiff. Harry Bingham, of Littleton, and Drew, Shurtleff, Morris & Oakes, of Lancaster, for defendant.

PLUMMER, J. The following requests for instructions, except so far as included in the charge, were denied, subject to the defendant's exception:

(2) In considering the question of the liability of the town for not railing the highway at the place of the accident, the question is not whether a railing would have rendered the highway safe and prevented the accident, but whether repair of that character was reasonably required.

(4) Towns are not bound to maintain railings that will resist, without breaking, the force of an automobile weighing 3,000 pounds going at a rate of 15 or 20 miles an hour.

(6) If you find that a railing which would have made the highway reasonably safe for travel thereon would not have prevented the injury, then the plaintiff cannot recover, because the lack of such a railing was not the proximate cause of the injury.

(7) An automobile is not a carriage, within the meaning of the statute making towns liable for injuries to "any person, his team or carriage, traveling upon a bridge, culvert or sluiceway, or dangerous embankments and defective railings upon a highway."

(8) Public roads are intended for ordinary travel; if they meet the requirements which their ordinary use demands, when used by travelers on foot and with teams and carriages, the town has performed its legal duty under the law, and cannot be made answerable in damages for extraordinary accidents occurring on them.

[1] The second, sixth, and eighth requests were covered in the charge. The court told the jury several times in different phraseology that the defendant was not liable unless the unrailled embankment was one which reasonably ought to have been railled, and that reasonable men would have railled. It was made clear that the plaintiff could not recover unless the absence of the railing was the cause of the accident; and the jury must have understood from the language of the court that the defendant's liability was limited to maintaining at the place of the accident the highway reasonably suitable for the ordinary travel thereon, for that was distinctly pointed out. These requests for instructions being substantially included in the charge, the exception to their denial cannot be sustained. The court was not required to use the specific language employed by the defendant in its requests. Wheeler v. Railway, 70 N. H. 607, 615, 50 Atl. 103, 54 L. R. A. 955; Walker v. Railroad, 71 N. H. 271, 273, 51 Atl. 918; Bond v. Bean, 72 N. H. 444, 57 Atl. 340, 101 Am. St. Rep. 686; Kasjeta v. Nashua Mfg. Co., 73 N. H. 22, 25, 58 Atl. 874; Marcotte v. Maynard Shoe Co., 76 N. H. 507, 513, 85 Atl. 284.

[2] The evidence does not support the statement made in the fourth request. It does not appear that the car was going 15 or 20 miles an hour when it fell down the embankment. The testimony is that when the car left the road it was going not more than 20 miles an hour. This apparently refers to the time when the car went into the ditch on the north side of the road. It ran in the ditch a short distance, and to bring the car out of it the deceased had to put on the power; then it went across the road and over the embankment; but it does not appear at what rate of speed the car was then going, and an instruction based upon the assumption that the automobile was going 15 or 20 miles an hour when it went over the embankment was not warranted by the evidence, and was therefore properly refused. Challis v. Lake, 71 N. H. 90, 95, 51 Atl. 260; Kuba v. Devonshire Mills, 73 N. H. 245, 247, 99 Atl. 91. "Before the court can be required to give particular instructions, there must be evidence, relevant and pertinent, upon which to found them." Goodrich v. Eastern Railroad, 38 N. H. 390, 397; Woodman v. Northwood, 67 N. H. 307, 309, 36 Atl. 255; Hersey v. Hutchins, 70 N. H. 130, 46 Atl. 33; Osgood v. Maxwell, 78 N. H. 35, 38, 95 Atl. 954.

[3] No error was committed in the refusal to grant the seventh request. In this case damages were sought for killing the plaintiff's intestate, and not for injuries to the automobile, as the request indicates. The statute (Laws 1915, c. 48) makes towns liable for damages happening to any person traveling upon a bridge, culvert, or sluiceway, or dangerous embankments and defective railings, upon any highway, which at such places is defective or in want of repair, rendering it unsuitable for the travel thereon. The plaintiff is entitled to maintain his action, so far as the point under consideration is concerned, if his intestate was a traveler upon the highway. The deceased was certainly a traveler when the accident occurred. The statute does not prescribe in what manner a person shall travel to entitle him to its protection. One riding in an automobile is as much a traveler upon the highway as he who walks or rides in a horse-drawn vehicle. In Hendry v. North Hampton, 72 N. H. 351, 355, 56 Atl. 922, 924 (84 L. R. A. 70, 101 Am. St. Rep. 681) which was an action for injury received by the plaintiff while riding a bicycle in the highway, the court said:

"The defect complained of in the present case was an unrailled and dangerous embankment. We must assume, from the instructions of the court and the verdict of the jury, that it rendered the highway unsuitable, not only for traveling by bicycle, but for ordinary travel as well. This being so, we see no reason why the fact that the plaintiff was on a bicycle, instead of on horseback or on foot pushing her bicycle, should preclude her recovery. Common sense rejects the distinction. The statute furnishes no warrant for it, either in letter or spirit. It says, 'Towns are liable for damages happening to any person * * * traveling,' etc., without any expressed limitation as to the mode of conveyance. 'A traveler is one who travels in any way.' To travel is 'to pass or make a journey from place to place, whether on foot, on horseback, or in any conveyance.' Traveling is 'the act of making a journey; change of place; passage.' The word 'traveling,' as used in some penal statutes, may have a narrow meaning; but, in order to maintain an action against a city or town for a defect in a highway, one need be a traveler only in the general sense above indicated."

See, also, Hardy v. Keene, 52 N. H. 370, 377.

The defendant relies upon Doherty v. Ayer, 197 Mass. 241, 83 N. E. 677, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 816, 125 Am. St. Rep. 355. The Massachusetts statute under which the action was brought is not like the statute here, and in that case damages were sought only for injuries to the automobile, and furthermore it was not held that one could not recover for damages to an automobile upon a highway, if the highway was unsuitable for the ordinary travel thereon.

The plaintiff was a traveler upon the highway, not only in the general and usual sense of that term, but also in a method approved and sanctioned by the state. Laws 1915, c. 129.

Exception overruled. All concurred.

(261 Pa. 546)

GASKILL v. PITTSBURGH LIFE & TRUST CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 8, 1918.)

1. INSURANCE §=360(4)—PREMIUM—PAYMENT—COLLECTION OF CHECK.

Under ordinary rules of law, when an insurer cashed a check given by insured to take up his premium note, the note was paid.

2. INSURANCE §=665(8)—LIFE INSURANCE—FORFEITURE FOR NONPAYMENT OF PREMIUM—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In action by policy holder for premiums paid on a policy, defended on ground of its forfeiture by failure to pay premium note on its maturity, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding of insurer's waiver of forfeiture.

3. INSURANCE §=237—LIFE INSURANCE—WRONGFUL REVOCATION OF POLICY—REMEDIES OF INSURED.

Holder of life insurance policy, wrongfully revoked by insurer, may elect whether to enforce the contract, or treat it as rescinded and recover for the breach.

4. INSURANCE §=198(5)—LIFE INSURANCE—BREACH OF CONTRACT—DAMAGES.

Where holder of a life insurance policy wrongfully revoked by insurer elects to treat the contract as rescinded and recover for breach, he may recover full amount of the premiums paid, with interest, without deduction for protection afforded when policy was in effect.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Crawford County.

Assumpsit by William H. Gaskill against the Pittsburgh Life & Trust Company. From a judgment on a verdict for plaintiff for $6,815.46, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Frank Ewing, of Pittsburgh, and J. A. Northam, of Meadville, for appellant. Frank J. Thomas, of Meadville, for appellee.

MOSCHZISKER, J. In 1896, plaintiff insured his life with a company whose business was later formally taken over by the defendant corporation, which assumed liability under the policy here in question. All premiums were paid by plaintiff as they fell due, until December 15, 1914, when he provided for one amounting to $217.50 by payment of $100 and delivery to defendant of two notes, the first for $67.50, at two months, and a second for $50, payable March 15, 1915. The larger of these obligations was met when due, but the other was overlooked until March 17, 1915, upon which date plaintiff sent his check for $51 to defendant, in payment of the $50 note, with interest. The latter received and deposited the check in bank, and, on March 20, 1915, it was duly paid. The next day plaintiff received a letter from defendant, saying:

"We regret to state that the policy has elapsed for nonpayment of this note when due."

The letter further states:

"We have credited your remittance in suspense," and suggest that, "before we can consider reinstatement of [the policy], it will be necessary for you to fill out, sign and return the inclosed self-health certificate."

On March 22, 1915, this certificate was signed and returned to defendant, who, three days later, advised plaintiff it was insufficient, asking that he cause himself to be examined by either of two designated physicians. This latter request was complied with, and plaintiff mailed the required certificate of such examination to defendant, who acknowledged receipt thereof on April 6, 1915, but stated it was not approved. Neither at this time, nor in its affidavit of defense, nor in the evidence at trial, has defendant given any reason for its refusal to accept these health certificates; so far as the record shows, the company simply declined to approve them, and advised plaintiff his insurance stood canceled. No attempt was made to return the check for $51, or the amount thereof, until May 20, 1915, when defendant sent plaintiff $50.62, which the latter declined to receive. The $50 note was never returned, and, in several letters, defendant took the position that the policy was no longer in force. March 3, 1916, plaintiff brought suit for all premiums paid by him with interest; a verdict was rendered for plaintiff upon which judgment was entered against defendant, and the latter has appealed.

One of the conditions of the contract of insurance here involved is "that, if any payment on this policy be not made when due, this policy shall lapse and shall be ipso facto null and void"; another provision states that after the first premium one month's grace shall be allowed upon written request, but "not otherwise." The premium note due March 15, 1915, and which plaintiff did not pay until two days thereafter, contains this provision:

"If the said note is not paid at maturity, all claims to further insurance, and all benefits whatever, which full payment in cash would have secured, shall immediately become void and become forfeited."

Defendant stands upon what it contends to be its strict legal rights, and asserts a forfeiture under the above-quoted terms of the policy and note. On the other hand, plaintiff contends that defendant by its conduct waived such rights of forfeiture, and subsequently, without warrant of law, canceled its policy. The issues as to this waiver were duly submitted to the jury and found against defendant; the verdict was sustained by the court below, and we are not convinced of any sufficient reason for reversing the judgment entered thereon.

[1, 2] Had defendant really desired to stand upon its legal rights under the policy and note, it should have promptly returned plaintiff's check, with a notification that the policy had lapsed; then it might have negotiated for a reinstatement of the policy in its own time and way. Instead of pursuing this course, however, the insurance company cashed the check, stating to plaintiff that the amount thereof had been credited "in suspense," and suggesting that plaintiff furnish a health certificate. There is nothing in the letter then addressed to plaintiff showing what the phrase "in suspense" means, nor is there any evidence that plaintiff understood its meaning; moreover, the policy provides for no such procedure, nor does it contain any provision in relation to the health certificates demanded by defendant. When defendant received and collected plaintiff's check, retaining the cash therefrom, it knew all the facts with reference to his two days' default on the premium note, and also that this check was sent in payment thereof. Under ordinary rules of law, when the insurance company cashed the check, the note was paid, and, with this latter obligation thus discharged, defendant could not hold plaintiff's money and maintain its position that the policy had lapsed through nonpayment of premium; at least, under all the circumstances at bar, there was a question whether or not defendant had waived its right of forfeiture, and this was properly submitted to the jury. Since we see no reason to disturb the verdict rendered in favor of plaintiff, in our future consideration of this case we must take it as an established fact that the policy was declared at an end by defendant after what was equivalent to a prompt and full payment of premiums due; hence such cancellation was unwarranted in law.

[3, 4] The remaining question concerns the measure of damages; in cases of the character of the one before us, the rule upon this subject is not uniform throughout the United States (14 R. O. L. 1014), but seems well settled in Pennsylvania. American Life Ins. Co. v. McAden, 109 Pa. 399, 1 Atl. 256, is a case where, because a premium was not paid on the due date, the company declared a policy of life insurance at an end, and the assured, alleging an unlawful forfeiture, instituted suit to regain the premiums theretofore paid. A full recovery was allowed, on the theory that, the company having unlawfully declared the policy terminated, plaintiffs might—

"take the defendants at their word, treat the contract as rescinded, and recover back the premiums paid, as so much money had and received for their use."

We there say (109 Pa. 404, 405, 1 Atl. 253):

"Rescission or avoidance, properly so called, annihilates the contract, and puts the parties in the same position as if it had never existed; and notice that a party will not perform his contract has the same effect as a breach."

After this we add:

"It is of no consequence that the payment of the premiums was voluntary, upon a valid obligation of the plaintiff to discharge a debt which [he] owed, and which defendant had a right to receive; the action is not founded in any fraud or failure in the original contract, but on a rescission of it through the subsequent refusal of the defendant to perform it."

Moreover, although there, as here, the contention was made that, for several years, the assured had enjoyed the protection of the policy and should have their right of recovery reduced accordingly, after due consideration, we expressly refused so to rule.

American Life Ins. Co. v. McAden, supra, was later followed and approved in Titlow v. Reliance Life Ins. Co., 246 Pa. 503, 92 Atl. 747, under like circumstances of default in payment of premium. It is true that in the Titlow Case the contract of insurance had no express provision for forfeiture; also that Insurance Co. v. McAden was treated by us as though the policy there involved contained no such provision. In neither of these cases, however, was the suit upon the policy of insurance; on the contrary, in each instance the cause of action was expressly based upon an alleged unlawful rescission of such contract. Therefore, so far as the measure of damages is concerned, both are on a parallel with the case at bar. In other words, in the cited cases, defendant had no reserved contractual right of forfeiture, while here such right, though existing, was waived; but there, as here, the suit was to recover premiums on a count for money had and received, and the rescission of the contract by the insurance company was determined to be unwarranted. These facts bring all three cases into parallel on the question of the measure of damages. Also see opinion by Rice, P. J., in Kerns v. Prudential Ins. Co., 11 Pa. Super. Ct. 209, where it is held that, upon an unlawful forfeiture of a policy of insurance, "the insured may treat the contract as rescinded and recover back the premiums already paid with interest"; and 19 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 98, where the rule is stated thus:

"One holding a policy in a company, which wrongfully revokes the policy, may elect whether to enforce the contract or treat it as rescinded and recover for the breach; and, if he takes the latter course, it has been held that he may recover back the full amount of the premiums paid thereon, with interest."

On the whole, the case at bar was well tried, and the assignments show no reversible error; accordingly, they all are overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

1. TRUSTS §272(1)—EXECUTION OF TRUST—TESTAMENTARY TRUST — CAPITAL AND INCOME.

The principal of testamentary trust fund and the equitable income payable to life beneficiaries upon delivery of trust funds from executor to trustee are ascertained by determining what sum, if invested at time of testator's death at $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. interest, would at time trustee received money, together with interest, amount to sum received; the amount of investment being principal of trust fund, and the interest being equitable income due life beneficiaries.

2. TRUSTS §272(1)—EXECUTION OF TRUST—TESTAMENTARY TRUST.

The separation of equitable income from principal, where there are no payments from executor to trustee within the year following testator's death, should be as of the date of the closing of executor's final account, and not the date of passing the account.

Bill for instructions by Willard Hall Bradford, administrator d. b. n. c. t. a. of the will of Junia K. Dwight, deceased, against the Fidelity Trust Company, a corporation of the state of Pennsylvania, executor under the last will and testament of Harriet C. Prevost, deceased. Decree ordered.

Thomas F. Bayard, of Wilmington, for complainant. Herbert H. Ward, of Wilmington, for defendant.

THE CHANCELLOR. The bill for instructions filed by Willard Hall Bradford, administrator d. b. n. c. t. a. of Junia K. Dwight, deceased, raises the question as to the application of the rule established recently respecting equitable income for a life beneficiary of a trust estate.

By the bill of the representative of the Dwight estate it appears that by item IX of her will the testatrix after making sundry legacies, gave all the rest of her estate to her executors in trust to keep the estate invested and out of the income or interest pay certain sums, and by the eleventh paragraph of item IX to pay the balance of the yearly income or interest to her two sisters, Harriet C. Prevost and Jane B. Porter, share and share alike, for their joint lives, and upon the death of either to the survivor for life. There was a disposition of the principal of the trust estate after the death of the survivor.

Junia K. Dwight, the testator, died May 4, 1915, and letters testamentary were soon thereafter granted to Harriet C. Prevost, the surviving executrix. No account was passed by the executrix, and on March 16, 1917, she was at her own request removed as executrix and Willard Hall Bradford was on the same day appointed administrator d. b. n. c. t. a. On April 24, 1917, he passed a first and final account as such administrator and received as trustee under item IX $395,667.14. Harriet C. Prevost died on September 17, 1917, and the Fidelity Trust Company, a corporaby the administrator with respect to the income applicable under paragraph 11 of item IX.

In the case of Equitable Trust Co. v. Kent et al., 101 Atl. 875, the rule was established that where a testator gave pecuniary legacies and the residue to a trustee in trust for his widow and son for life, with remainder over, and gave to the executor power to sell real estate, and the executor sold productive and unproductive real and personal estate, collected income consisting of rents, interest and dividends, and paid debts and legacies of the decedent, the life beneficiaries are entitled to have equitable income for the first year after the death of the testator; that said income is to be ascertained by determining what sum, if it had been invested from the death of the testator for one year at the rate of $4\frac{1}{2}$ per centum per annum would with interest amount to the sum of money received by the trustee, the larger sum being principal for the remainderman and the smaller one income for the life tenant. The rule as to calculating the first year's income for life beneficiaries under a will is limited, of course, to gifts of the residuary estate, or of an undivided part thereof. Theoretically the estate of the testator is settled within or at the end of the year from granting letters testamentary, and usually these letters are granted within a short time after the death of the testator. Of course, theoretically the amount of the residue cannot be ascertained until the estate is settled by a final account.

In case the final account is passed at the expiration of the year from the death of the testator, the problem of ascertaining the first year's income is simple, the rule adopted as to the Kent will being applied, and thereafter the beneficiary receives the income actually received on the investments of the principal as so ascertained by use of the rule.

In case the executor during the year from the death of the testator pays money or delivers other assets of the decedent to the trustee as part of the residuary estate (as a dutiful executor should do if it can be done with reasonable degree of safety), the trustee should then separate equitable income from principal as to the property received by the use of the rule. Of course, the figures constituting the divisor will not be 1.045, but a part thereof proportioned to the time elapsed since the death of the testator. For example, if the trustee receives a sum of money at the expiration of six months from the death of the testator, the divisor would be 1.0225.

The same principle is to be applied as to payments on account of residue made after the expiration of the year, because in no other way can the life beneficiary receive income from the death of the testator. Therefore, if, for example, the trustee receives money on account of the residuary estate at the expiration of two years from the death of the testator, the divisor for the sum so received would be 1.09.

[1] In brief, when and as the residuary estate is received by the trustee, whether as a whole or at different times in different parts, or whether received during or after the expiration of the first year from the death of the testator, the rule is to be applied, the divisor used in separating equitable income from principal being varied according to the time which elapses from the death of the testator, the rate being $4\frac{1}{2}$ per centum per annum.

This was done recently by the trustee under the will of James Harvey Spruance, M. D., in an account approved by me, where there were payments of part of the residue during and after the expiration of the year, the divisor being varied in proportion to the lapse of time from the death of the testator.

The rule and the method of applying it to cases where the residue is not officially ascertained by a final account until after the lapse of the year from the death of the testator is fair to the successive interests. The life beneficiary receives income from the death of the testator as though the money constituting the residue as subsequently ascertained had been paid to the trustee the day after the death of the testator and immediately invested by the trustee as trust funds should be invested, which being conservative and safe are not productive of the higher rate of income realizable on other kinds of investments. If the assets of the decedent which constituted the residuary estate produced income in the hands of the executor at a larger rate than that stated in the rule, then the beneficiary in remainder would be benefited, and a different situation would show a disadvantage to the remainderman. But in the long run there would be little or no injustice to either of the successive interests by adopting the rule. Any gross injustice which would result from an application of the rule would be remediable.

[2] In order to apply the rule accurately the separation of equitable income from principal in case there be no payments to the trustee within the year, should be as of the date of the closing of the final account by the executor, and not the date of passing the account, for there may be between those dates receipts by the executor which should be considered in the calculation. If the date of closing the account be not ascertainable, the date the last item of receipt by the executor should be adopted.

With respect to the will of Mrs. Dwight, the amount of the residuary estate having been determined on April 24, 1917, and the portion thereof affected by paragraph 11 of item IX having been ascertained, the separation of equitable income from principal is made as of April 24, 1917, which was 1 year, 11 months and 21 days from the death of the testatrix on May 4, 1915. The divisor is, therefore, to be based on that interval of time at the rate of $4\frac{1}{2}$ per centum for a whole year.

The income to April 24, 1917, so ascertained is payable to Mrs. Prevost and Mrs. Porter in equal shares. After June 25, 1917, to the death of Mrs. Prevost, September 17, 1917, the income actually received by the trustee was divisible in the same way. After September 17, 1917, the whole of the actual income was payable to Mrs. Porter.

Let a decree be entered accordingly.

(12 Del. Ch. 53)

KENYON v. MILLARD.

(Court of Chancery of Delaware. Oct. 15, 1918.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE §58—LAND CONTRACT—EFFECT OF PENALTY.

The fact that a land contract provides for payment of sum of money as penalty is not in itself sufficient ground for denying specific performance.

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE §58—CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE—SUM PAYABLE ON BREACH.

Where land contract provides that for the true performance of the contract, each party binds himself to the other in a certain "penal" sum, buyer, upon seller's failure to perform, may refuse to accept specified sum in settlement, and secure relief through specific performance or action for damages.

3. CUSTOMS AND USAGES §15(1)—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT—CUSTOMS OF REAL ESTATE MEN.

Where the meaning of a clause in a land contract was clear and unambiguous, and the language used capable of but one interpretation, testimony of real estate men as to the effect of such a clause according to the custom of men in real estate business was inadmissible.

Bill by John William Kenyon against Dorothy W. Millard. Dismissed on motion of complainant.

Bill for specific performance. By a written memorandum of agreement the complainant, Kenyon, agreed to buy, and the defendant, Dorothy W. Millard, agreed to sell, real estate for $4,500; and $100, as stated therein, was deposited by the purchaser with the agent of the seller as "forfeit money to bind the bargain" and "to be considered as a part of the purchase price." The memorandum also contained the following:

"And for the true performance of all and every one of the covenants and agreements aforesaid, each of the said parties binds himself, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, in the penal sum of $100, lawful money in the United States, firmly by these presents."

To compel specific performance of the contract a bill was filed, and a rule for a preliminary injunction to prevent a conveyance otherwise than to the purchaser was awarded. At the hearing of the rule the solicitors for the parties submitted arguments as to the effect of the agreement and particularly the above-quoted clause.

On behalf of the defendant testimony was offered to prove a uniform custom and practice of real estate brokers in Wilmington to construe the clause as fixing liquidated damages, so that the seller may be relieved from carrying out the contract by paying the penalty, and therefore the defendant cannot be compelled to specifically perform the agreement if she offer to refund the amount received and pay to the purchaser the sum of one hundred dollars as penalty or liquidated damages.

Charles F. Curley, of Wilmington, for complainant. William F. Kurtz, of Wilmington, for defendant.

THE CHANCELLOR. [1] If the clause in question is a penalty, then it is settled law that that alone is not sufficient to deny a right to specific performance in a court of equity. 1 Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence (3d Ed.) p. 748. Where there is in an agreement of sale a provision clearly showing that a party to the contract may either perform it or pay a sum of money, then as there is an alternative duty, he cannot be compelled to perform the duty he declines to perform, when he chooses to perform the other alternative.

A provision in an agreement of sale of land, whatever it is called in the agreement, whether a penalty or liquidated damages, and which is clearly neither, but is annexed for the purpose of securing performance of the contract, entitles either party to a decree of specific performance. Koch v. Streuter, 218 Ill. 546, 75 N. E. 1049, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 210; Barrett v. Geisinger, 179 Ill. 240, 53 N. E. 576; Powell v. Dwyer, 149 Mich. 141, 112 N. W. 490, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 978.

[2] The clause in question is not stated to be either a penalty or liquidated damages. There is in it no direct statement that the seller may refuse to convey on paying the buyer $100, nor does it say that either party may default and be relieved of any obligation to perform by paying the other party $100. It is clearly a provision intended to secure performance of the contract. Indeed, it expressly says so. It says, for the true performance of the contract each party binds himself to the other in a certain sum of money. In a court of law this may entitle the buyer to sue the defaulting seller for that sum if the buyer wants to end the agreement. In such case it makes no difference that it is called a "penal" sum. The right to the money is one which the buyer has if he elects to take it, or collect it in settlement of his rights against the seller. But if he does not choose to so settle the matter, he has an indubitable right to either an action for damages or specific performance. It would be strange if a provision of a contract purporting to be inserted in order to secure performance should be effective to defeat an effort of one party to enforce specific performance of the contract.

[3] Inasmuch as the meaning of the clause is clear and unambiguous, and the words used reasonably capable of but one interpretation, it is immaterial what view persons engaged in the sale of real estate in this city take of the meaning of the words, or their practice, or custom, or intention with respect thereto. It is not the case of proving a custom of the trade with respect to a matter not disclosed in the contract, as in the case of Fraser v. Ross, 1 Pennewill, 348, 41 Atl. 204, or as showing the course of conduct of an individual in honoring as his obligation to pay money a certain kind of card with his name and an amount of money named thereon, being the check, ticket or token given by him in payment for work done, as for instance by pickers of berries. Bryan v. Brown, 8 Pennewill, 504, 53 Atl. 55. The testimony which the defendant offered to produce as to the custom of dealers in Wilmington to regard the clause in question as giving to the seller a right to be free of his obligation to convey by paying the sum mentioned in like clauses, was clearly inadmissible and inapplicable to a clause, the meaning and intention of which was so clear.

NOTE.—All of the questions of law and fact involved in this cause were raised at the hearing of the rule for a preliminary injunction, and after stating the foregoing conclusions to the solicitors for the respective parties a conveyance was made by the defendant to the complainant of the premises and the bill of complaint dismissed on motion of the solicitor for the complainant.

(12 Del. Ch. 41)

DAVIS v. FRANTZ et al.

(Court of Chancery of Delaware. July 31, 1918.)

EXECUTION \Leftrightarrow 158(1) — STAY — PENDING APPEAL TO OTHER COURT.

Chancery Court having no jurisdiction to decide the disputed question whether appeal will lie from court of common pleas to Superior Court from judgment for landlord for possession against holding over tenant, it will not, in the absence of any showing of special damages from ousting of tenant, stay execution of judgment till appeal taken with bond can be heard by Superior Court.

Suit by Blanche H. Davis against Abram E. Frantz and another. Restraining order denied.

Injunction bill. As required by rule 101 of the Court of Chancery, after filing the bill of complaint in this cause, the complainant served notice upon the defendants of her intention to apply to the Chancellor for an order restraining the defendants from further proceeding under a judgment in the court of common pleas for New Castle county to obtain possession of premises by Abram E. Frantz, one of the defendants, occupied by the complainant as tenant under a lease. Solicitors representing the respective parties appeared before the Chancellor at the time designated in the notice, and opposition to the issuance of a restraining order was made by the solicitors for the defendants. The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

Robert Adair, of Wilmington, for complainant. Reuben Satterthwaite, Jr., of Wilmington, for defendant Frantz. Edmund S. Hellings, of Wilmington, for defendant sheriff.

THE CHANCELLOR. The complainant, a tenant, was the defendant in an action by the landlord in the court of common pleas as holding-over tenant, and judgment was there rendered on July 17, 1918, against her for a sum as damages and an order staying execution of a writ of possession until July 25, 1918, was entered upon condition that the money damages be paid to the landlord on or before July 17, 1918. On July 17 the money and costs were deposited under protest with the clerk of the court and thereafter by order of the court of common pleas paid to the landlord's attorney. An appeal was prayed for on July 17 to the Superior Court and signed on the record a statement thereof, and the statement was also signed by the surety in the appeal. This form of entering an appeal and giving surety therein is that used in appeals from a justice of the peace to the Superior Court in cases where such appeals are expressly allowed.

On July 22 the tenant filed a bill in the Court of Chancery alleging the above facts, and that the landlord had threatened to issue after July 25 a writ of the court of common pleas to put him in possession of the premises notwithstanding the appeal and the giving of the security, though both he and the sheriff had notice of the appeal and giving of security. It was alleged that if the writ were issued and served the complainant would be deprived of possession, and that the Superior Court would not be in session until September 16. There was also a claim made that the payment of the damages under protest constituted the complainant as tenant. But there is clearly no merit in such contention.

The prayers of the bill, among others, were that the landlord be perpetually restrained from taking possession and for a preliminary injunction and restraining order against the taking of possession until the appeal could be heard by the Superior Court.

Upon presenting the bill to the Chancellor on July 31, solicitors for the landlord and the other defendant, the sheriff, being present on notice, the motion for a restraining order was heard.

There was no objection made in the bill, or otherwise, to the judgment in the court of common pleas, or to its regularity and validity. The complainant claims that she had a right to take an appeal, and had done so and given security which should operate as a supersedeas, and that as she would be deprived of possession of real estate by an execution of the writ of possession, the Chancellor should enjoin the execution thereof until the Superior Court could decide whether there was an appeal and the effect thereof if properly taken.

The act creating the court of common pleas gave to it concurrent jurisdiction in actions against holding-over tenants, presumably concurrent with justices of the peace. It also provided, as follows:

"§763 H. Sec. 8. From any order, ruling, decision or judgment of said court, the aggrieved party shall have the rights of appeal or certiorari, to the Superior Court of New Castle county, in the same manner as is now provided by law as to causes tried before justices of the peace." Chapter 250, vol. 29, Laws of Delaware.

It is argued that this gave the appeal in this case, and that the manner of taking the appeal was that provided in actions before justices of the peace in cases of debt. On the other hand it is argued that the statute gave an appeal only in those classes of cases where appeals were by statute given from judgments of justices of the peace, and that as there was no appeal from judgments of justices of the peace in cases of landlord against holding-over tenant, there was no appeal to such a judgment in the court of common pleas.

This question is one that the Chancellor should not decide, and its decision should be left to the Superior Court, or court of common pleas. It is not entirely clear that the complainant was not entitled to an appeal, so that the Chancellor must look further into his powers and duties in the matter.

If the conveniences to result to the parties as the result of action by the Chancellor be weighed and balanced, it would seem clear that the landlord should not be restrained from taking possession of his property. No special matter is alleged by the bill to show special damage to the complainant if ousted from the premises, and the absence of such allegations indicates that there was no such special damages. Whereas the landlord may be so damaged for several reasons which could be imagined as reasonably likely to exist. The tenant would probably have an action against both the landlord and the sheriff for damages if turned out of the premises in case her right to a stay pending the appeal was interfered with.

Again, this court has no right to do more than grant suspensory relief until some other tribunal decides the question as to the right of appeal. Ordinarily a court of equity does not take jurisdiction merely to grant suspensory relief, or at all unless having taken jurisdiction for any purpose or reason it can hold jurisdiction for all purposes, which it could not do here.

Again, there is no attack on the judgment thing respecting that judgment, or the issues raised and decided there. On the other hand, a bond with surety given by the complainant would afford the landlord protection so far as security for payment of his rent is concerned, and he may prefer that to risking to proceed to enforce his right of possession. But this court cannot decide for the landlord as to his preference in this matter.

The case of Staats v. Herbert, 4 Del. Ch. 598, 518, does not apply, for in that case where the Chancellor acted to restrain an execution on a judgment when the Superior Court was not in session, the Court of Chancery and the Superior Court had concurrent jurisdiction, i. e., either one could have had jurisdiction to decide the main question, and so whichever first took jurisdiction could continue to hold it. Whereas here the Court of Chancery clearly has no power to decide whether the appeal would lie, and at most could suspend action on the writ of possession until some other court decides whether the writ had been stayed by a properly taken appeal.

For the reasons here indicated, the duty of the Chancellor to grant even the suspensory relief is so doubtful, that it should now refuse to grant the restraining order, but leave the defendants free to pursue their legal remedies and take the responsibility therefor, if there be any.

The restraining order is therefore denied.

(12 Del. Ch. 45)

JEFFERSON v. STUCKERT et al.

(Court of Chancery of Delaware. Oct. 14, 1918.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ¶185—NECESSITY OF CHANGE OF POSSESSION.

A mortgage of personalty with possession retained by the mortgagor was not valid as against other creditors of the mortgagor until authorized by statute.

2. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ¶21 — DEBTS SECURED.

A chattel mortgage may be given to secure a debt, or to indemnify, or for both purposes.

3. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ¶68—VALIDITY—AFFIDAVIT.

In view of the statute providing that a chattel mortgage shall not be valid without an affidavit that it "was made for the bona fide purpose of securing a debt or making indemnity, as the case may be," a mortgage stated to be for securing a debt would not be valid to make indemnity, and vice versa.

4. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ¶68—STATEMENT OF OBLIGATION—VALIDITY—EXECUTION CREDITOR.

In view of the statute providing that a chattel mortgage shall not be valid without an affidavit that it "was made for the bona fide purpose of securing a debt or making indemnity, as the case may be," a mortgage purporting to secure a certain sum then "due and owing," but which in fact was given to secure a debt of Bill by Charles W. Jefferson against John C. Stuckert and another. Decree for complainant.

See, also, 108 Atl. 870.

Bill to have declared invalid a chattel mortgage. By the admissions of the mortgagor and mortgagee, the chattel mortgage was given, not only to secure a debt which was then owing by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, but also to secure advances of money to be made by the mortgagee to the mortgagor. The mortgage was for $1,000, which by the condition of the mortgage was stated to be "due and owing" at the date thereof, and it was stated in the affidavit made by the parties to it, and made part of it, that the mortgage was made for the bona fide purpose of securing a debt, and was not made to cover the property of the mortgagor, or to protect it from his creditors, or to hinder or delay them in the execution of their debts.

The complainant was an execution creditor of the mortgagor, and had levied on the mortgaged property after the mortgage was recorded. Afterwards the property was sold by the sheriff under the execution, and there being a dispute as to the right to the proceeds of sale, the money, amounting to $250, was paid into the Superior Court for New Castle County. But that court declined to decide the question raised by the parties, and gave the complainant leave to file his bill in the Court of Chancery to ascertain the rights of the parties to the fund.

In his bill the complainant asks that the chattel mortgage be declared to be invalid. Both of the defendants have answered the bill, and it is admitted that the mortgage was given to secure an existing debt and advances to be made, and which were made. They claim that the defendant Stuckert, the mortgagee, had made a binding agreement to make advances up to a certain amount, and that therefore he was protected as to such advances, not having had actual notice of the levy of the execution of the complainant.

It was also claimed by the complainant that by the admissions of the answer there was only $62 due the mortgagee at the date of the mortgage, and in any event the mortgagee is not entitled to more than that sum from the money paid into the Superior Court.

The case was heard upon bill, answer, testimony and exhibits. At the conclusion of the complainant's case the defendants moved to dismiss the bill, but subsequently put in their evidence reserving their rights under the motion to dismiss the bill.

S. D. Townsend, Jr., and Hugh M. Morris, both of Wilmington, for complainant. Walter J. Willis, of Wilmington, for defendants.

THE CHANCELLOR. In this case the sole question, which it is necessary to decide for the first time in this state so far as reported cases show, is whether a mortgage of personal property which purports to secure only a debt due and owing, but which was also given to secure advances to be made to the mortgagor by the mortgagee, is valid as against an execution creditor of the mortgagor, the levy on the mortgaged property having been made after the recording of the mortgage, though the judgment debt existed before the chattel mortgage was made.

It was stated in the condition in the mortgage that the money which the mortgagor was thereby bound to pay the mortgagee was "due and owing" by the former to the latter. Annexed to the mortgage was an affidavit by the parties to the mortgage that it was given to secure a debt, but without stating the amount thereof, or referring to advances.

[1-3] A mortgage of personalty with possession retained by the mortgagor was not valid as against other creditors of the mortgagor, until authorized by statute. In Delaware a valid chattel mortgage may be given to secure a debt, or to make (that is, give) indemnity, or it may be given for both purposes. But the true purpose, or purposes, must appear in the instrument or affidavit in order to make the mortgage valid. This conclusion is not so stated directly in the statute, but it is a necessary consequence of the provision of it that the mortgage shall not be valid without an affidavit "that the said mortgage was made for the bona fide purpose of securing a debt or making indemnity, as the case may be." It follows, also, that a mortgage stated to be for securing a debt would not be valid to make indemnity, and vice versa; otherwise there would be no meaning to the words used in the Act, and the evident purpose of it would be defeated.

It necessarily follows, also, that a mortgage stated to have been made to secure a debt when there was no indebtedness of the mortgagor to the mortgagee would be invalid, though given to make indemnity, if at the time the mortgage was made there was no contract of indemnity, or if it was really given to secure a debt. This is the effect of the statute independent of any fraudulent intention or purpose, though the deception might be considered evidence of an improper design.

Whether this invalidity would result as between mortgagor and mortgagee is here unimportant. It is certainly true, however, that a mortgage which does not state truly the purpose of the instrument is invalid so far as it affects the rights of an execution creditor of the mortgagor.

[4] Inasmuch as in this case the mortgage, though it purports to have been given to secure a debt then due and owing for a certain sum, was in fact given to secure a debt of much smaller amount, and was also given to make indemnity, or as security for future advances, it was under the statute invalid so far as the rights of the execution creditor were affected.

While this is clearly the meaning and effect of the Delaware statute, and so is decisive in this case without looking at the views of courts elsewhere, still it will be found that a similar view has been taken by other courts as to similar statutes of other states respecting chattel mortgages.

In New Jersey the statute declared a chattel mortgage void unless there be an affidavit stating the consideration of mortgage and as nearly as possible the amount due and to grow due thereon. In the case of Tingley v. International, etc., Co., 74 N. J. Eq. 538, 70 Atl. 919, where the affidavit stated that the consideration was paid by the mortgagee, when in fact it was paid by another person not named, the mortgage was declared to be invalid as to creditors of the mortgagor, though the court found it in fact an honest mortgage. This case was affirmed by the Court of Errors and Appeals in 76 N. J. Eq. 837, 75 Atl. 1102, without an opinion. Also in the case of Boice v. Conover, 54 N. J. Eq. 531, 35 Atl. 402, the affidavit stated that the consideration of a mortgage made by a firm was a loan to the firm then due and owing, whereas the true consideration was in part a loan to one of the partners individually and in part endorsement of notes of the firm then unmatured. This mortgage was held invalid against creditors, though the instrument was an honest mistake of the mortgagee. Vice Chancellor Emery, as to the claim of an honest mistake said:

" * * * But the question is one of the construction of a statute which defines what the affidavit must contain, and makes no exception or allowance for mistakes. As was said in Kenard v. Gray, 58 N. H. 51, a case arising on an affidavit under a somewhat similar law, the statute condemns such securities, because their natural tendency is to deceive and defraud creditors, however honest the intention of the parties. And as was held by Mr. Justice Dixon in Fletcher v. Bonnett (Err. & App. 1893) 51 N. J. Eq. 615, 618, 28 Atl. 601, the validity of the chattel mortgage depends on the correctness of the information in the affidavit, and not on the knowledge of the affiant of its truth. Neither, as it seems to me, can the validity of the mortgage depend on the honesty of an affiant in making an affidavit which is substantially untrue." Boice v. Conover, 54 N. J. Eq. 531, 35 Atl. 402, 405.

In Bollschweller v. Packer, etc., Co., 83 N. J. Eq. 459, 91 Atl. 1027, Vice Chancellor Emery held invalid a chattel mortgage given to secure notes and also any other sums which might become due under a contract, because the liability on the contract was not mentioned in the affidavit as part of the consideration of the mortgage.

By the Maryland statutes there must be an affidavit that the consideration was true and bona fide. The courts there have decided that if in fact the consideration as stated was untrue, the mortgage is invalid, independent of actual or intentional fraud. See Resmeyer v. Norwood, 117 Md. 320, 83 Atl. 347, where the mortgage stated a debt due to the mortgagee from the mortgagor, when in fact the mortgage was given to secure other creditors of the mortgagor. See also Denton v. Griffith, 17 Md. 301.

In Vermont the courts have taken the same view of a mortgage which falsely stated the consideration, though the statute simply required a statement in the mortgage of the liability, the court stating that the evident purpose of the act was to afford convenience without an opportunity for fraud. Tarbell v. Jones, 56 Vt. 312. In Nichols v. Bingham, 70 Vt. 320, 40 Atl. 827, a mortgage purporting to have been made to secure a note from the mortgagor to the mortgagee larger than the actual debt between them, while its real purpose was to secure the true debt and future advances and a liability as endorser, was held invalid as to creditors, and the oath thereto was false in fact.

In Blandy v. Benedict, 42 Ohio St. 295, by the mortgage it appeared that it was given to indemnify the mortgagee against liability as security for the mortgagor, but the affidavit stated that the mortgage was given to secure payment of a debt of the mortgagor to the mortgagee. It was held invalid against creditors of the mortgagor.

By the statute in New Hampshire no mortgage is valid against any person other than the mortgagor, unless sworn to in the manner prescribed, and if given to indemnify the mortgagee against any liability assumed, such liability shall be stated truly in the mortgage and the affidavit accompanying it must verify this validity, truth and justice of the liability. In Belknap v. Wendell, 81 N. H. 92, the whole sum secured by the mortgage was described as a debt, when in fact part of it was indemnity. This was decided to be invalid as to creditors of the mortgagor. The case of Kennard v. Gray, 58 N. H. 51, was to the same effect as to a mortgage purporting to have been given to secure an absolute debt but in fact to secure a collateral note. Such a mortgage was condemned because its natural tendency was to deceive and defraud creditors however honest the intentions of the parties were. Two cases in New Hampshire are apparently inconsistent with those above mentioned.

In the case of Parker v. Morrison, 46 N. H. 280, it was decided that under the statute a valid mortgage of personal property could not be given to a stranger to secure the debt of a third person, and that if given to secure a debt it must be a debt due by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, and if to secure a liability it must be a liability incurred by the mortgagee for the mortgagor. The unreported case of Richardson v. Blodgett was cited by the court as authority. There a mortgage had been given to secure a note of the mortgagor to the mortgagee and also to secure a liability which the mortgagee had incurred for the mortgagor by signing a note with him as his surety to a third person, and both were described in the affidavit as debts due from the mortgagor to the mortgagee. This mortgage was held valid to secure the debt due from the mortgagor to the mortgagee, but void as to creditors so far as it was intended to secure the liability incurred. The court in Parker v. Morrison evidently used this case solely as authority for the point that a chattel mortgage given for a liability incurred by the mortgagor to a person other than the mortgagee was invalid, and did not necessarily approve the general principle that a mortgage given to secure a debt and a liability would be good as to the debt, although not valid as to the security.

In Sumner v. Dalton, 58 N. H. 295, however, a mortgage given to secure notes of the mortgagor held by the mortgagee and also to indemnify the mortgagee from loss as indorser of another note of the mortgagor was held to be invalid as to the indemnity but valid as to the notes, as the affidavit stated that the mortgage was given to secure a debt. To support the decision the court cited only Richardson v. Blodgett, and saying briefly that the precise question raised had been there decided. There is, therefore, a lack of harmony in the New Hampshire decisions, for if the purpose of the statute as stated by the other New Hampshire cases was to prevent deception of creditors, then a mortgage which purports to be for a debt, but which is for a debt and indemnity certainly tends strongly and almost surely to deceive, or at least mislead creditors of the mortgagor, whether it be so intended, or not. Inasmuch as the very brief opinion in Sumner v. Dalton was based on an unreported decision, and is inconsistent with the better reasons given in Belknap v. Wendell and Kennard v. Gray, which cases were not referred to, or were ignored, it seems wise to follow these latter cases.

For the complainant it is urged that independent of the statute the mortgage was invalid as to the complainant, because it bore the badge of fraud, being given on its face for money due and owing, with an affidavit that it was given to secure a debt, while in fact it was in part for money due and owing and in part for future advances, which were certainly not then due and owing. To support this the case of Louden v. Vinton, 108 Mich. 313, 66 N. W. 222, and Butts v. Peacock, 23 Wis. 359, were cited, in neither of which states was there a statute expressly making the validity of a chattel mortgage depend on the making of an affidavit as to the real character of the transaction between the parties to the mortgage. In the case last cited, Butts v. Peacock, it was said, as to a mortgage given for a sum greater than was due:

"There are certainly strong reasons for holding such a mortgage fraudulent in law, upon the ground that it necessarily tends to hinder and delay the creditors of the mortgagor. It tends directly to deceive and mislead them, by inducing them to believe that the property is absolutely incumbered to the amount expressed on the face of the mortgage, when in truth it is not so. And it is clear that this might materially hinder them in the enforcement of their claims."

The mortgage in question certainly bore this badge of fraud in a legal sense, independent of the statute, and this fault was greater in that it is shown not to conform to the statutory requirements. A mortgage to secure a debt and future advances is not described in good faith as one given to secure a debt due and owing.

There are some authorities cited for the defendants, which seem to uphold as valid a mortgage given to secure a debt and advances, although the true transaction does not so appear. Wood v. Weimar, 104 U. S. 798, 28 L. Ed. 779; Monnot v. Ibert, 83 Barb. (N. Y.) 24; Nicklin v. Nelson, 11 Or. 406, 5 Pac. 51, 50 Am. Rep. 477. But in those cases and others to the same effect the courts were not construing statutes, but applying general principles. The question in this case is to be solved by the requirements of the statute, which invalidates a mortgage unless there be an affidavit stating whether the mortgage is given to secure a debt, or for indemnity, as the case may be.

It is also argued for the defendants, that a mortgage to secure advances will protect the mortgagee for advances made after an attachment or levy by a junior encumbrancer, if the mortgagee is under a binding obligation to make advances, unless the mortgagee had actual notice of the attachment or levy of the junior encumbrancer before making the advances. This too is quite immaterial in construing the statute.

The conclusion is clear, then, that the Delaware statute evidently intended, as were the statutes of other states, to afford a new convenience in financial transactions, and to give protection to persons other than the parties thereto against deception and possible fraud, by requiring an affidavit as to the real transaction. Therefore, a mortgage given in fact to secure a debt and future advances, but which states that it was for a debt due and owing, must be held invalid as against an execution creditor of the mortgagor. This conclusion is reached as an interpretation of the statute, independent of the good or bad faith of the parties thereto. Such a false statement tends naturally to hinder or delay creditors of the mortgagor in the collection of their debts, as well as to mislead, if not deceive, those not parties to it.

Inasmuch as the mortgage of June 1, 1916, was invalid as to the complainant, he was entitled to priority of payment from the proceeds of sale of the corn crop paid into the Superior Court, and is entitled to a decree to that effect and for his costs.

Let a decree be entered accordingly.

(12 Del. Ch. 386)

In re CULVER et al.

(Orphans' Court of Delaware. Sussex. July 8, 1918.)

1. GUARDIAN AND WARD \S 77 — SALE OF LAND—BENEFIT OF MINOR.

Under Rev. Code 1915, \S 3934, authorizing order for sale of a minor's lands by his guardian when it appears sale will be for minor's benefit, it is not enough that the widow of deceased, of whom the minor is sole heir, wants her dower appraised and paid to her in money.

2. DOWER \S 95, 101—PAYMENT IN MONEY—SALE.

Under Rev. Code 1915, \S 3289, 3290, 3292, 3318, as to assignment of dower, there is no right to money dower, unless the land subject to dower is sold in some proceeding other than widow's application for money dower, as in partition cause, applicable only where there are several heirs, or in a proceeding to sell to pay deceased's debts.

Petition by Albert E. Culver, guardian of Mildred E. Culver, minor, and Mamie E. Culver, widow of Perry M. Culver, deceased. Petition denied.

Andrew J. Lynch, of Georgetown, for petitioners.

CURTIS, P. J. The petition of a widow and of the guardian of a sole minor heir at law sets forth in substance that the decedent died May 28, 1918, intestate, leaving a widow and one child, and seised of two parcels of improved land; that the land will not divide; and that the widow waives the assignment of her dower and asks for an appraisement of her dower by the court and payment of her share of the land in money.

[1] This is called a partition cause, but it is not and cannot be one in legal effect, for there is a sole heir at law who takes title subject to dower. It is not properly an application of the guardian to sell land of the minor, for there is no proper allegation as required by section 3934, p. 1781, of the Revised Code of 1915, that such sale is for the benefit of the minor, and no reasons are set forth which would support such an allegation, except that the widow wants her dower appraised and paid to her in money, which is not sufficient. In such cases the matter of security of the guardian is important.

[2] By section 3318, p. 1525, of the Revised Code of 1915, a widow may have her dower assigned (which means by metes and bounds) according to article 2, chapter 95 (see page 1516, \S 3289), or by the same section (3318) upon partition, i. e. upon proper partition. If there is no proper partition, there is no law which authorizes a sale of land which is subject to dower in order to pay the widow her dower in money, calculated upon the partition tables of mortality.

This secures to the owner, or owners of land if there be more than one, a right to hold their land without its being sold, so that when the right of the widow to hold the land assigned to her for life is ended the then any one of an may start partition proceedings. Then if there is an allegation that the land will not divide advantageously, and it be either admitted (as where all join in the petition) or the petition be taken pro confesso (which is an implied admission), then dower in money may be held by the widow. But in the absence of such allegation, or if such an allegation shall not be sustained, then the commissioners must decide the question of division. If they find against a partition in severalty, then there must be a sale and the widow may waive her assignment of dower by metes and bounds, and take dower in money according to the table of mortality (sections 3290, 3292). So also any other person interested, i. e. tenant in common, may under section 3289 have dower so assigned by metes and bounds and hold the remainder as tenants in common, or otherwise. The guardian in this case could do so on behalf of his ward.

But the present petition is none of these things. Section 3292 supplements section 3290. By the latter a widow's proportionate part of the proceeds of sale is invested for her, and by the former she is paid a sum of money according to the tables.

Rule 15, p. 98, provides a procedure for section 3292. It can have no broader scope, because the statute does not give a widow a right to money dower, unless the land subject to dower is sold in some proceeding other than her application to have such money dower paid to her, as in a partition cause, or in a proceeding to sell land to pay debts of her deceased husband. The statutes only provide for an assignment by metes and bounds. Besides, there is no way to enforce payment of money dower when fixed by the procedure of the rule.

The prayers of the petition are, therefore, denied.

(68 N. J. Eq. 345)

BAKER v. BAKER. (No. 125.)

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey. Nov. 19, 1917.)

Appeal from Court of Chancery.

Suit by John L. Baker against Margaret Baker. From a decree for complainant, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

James Mercer Davis, of Camden, for appellant. Runyon & Autenreith, of Jersey City, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is taken from a decree nisi made by the Court of Chancery in favor of the petitioner below, granting a divorce on the ground of desertion. The original petition was filed June 8, 1915, and the hearing was on the pleadings as they stood, which were petition, answer, and cross-petition. The cross-petitioner charged the petitioner with being a resident of the state of New Jersey.

After the court had rendered its opinion to the effect that a decree for the petitioner would be made, and the cross-petition dismissed, the

New Jersey. After this hearing, which was solely on the question of residence, the court again decided that the petitioner was entitled to his decree, as the proofs showed him to be a resident, and consequently the decree nisi was entered. The petition of appeal presents only the question of residence, as to which we concur in the conclusions reached by the learned Vice Chancellor.

The decree of the court below is affirmed.

(79 N. H. 69)

BROWN v. PHILBRICK et al.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Rockingham. Oct. 1, 1918.)

WILLS §=523—CONSTRUCTION—EQUAL DIVISION BETWEEN CLASSES.

Under bequest to "H. or his heirs and to the heirs of B., to be divided equally between them," the equal division is between H. or his heirs, as a class, on the one hand, and the heirs of B., on the other hand.

Transferred from Superior Court, Rockingham County.

Petition by David Brown, executor, against Annie M. Philbrick and others. Transferred from superior court. Case discharged.

Petition for the construction of the following clause of the will of Sophia T. Gove:

"The remainder of my money * * * I give to Jeremiah Hilliard or his heirs and to the heirs of Ellen I. Brown to be divided equally among them."

Jeremiah and Ellen were cousins of the testatrix. Ellen died some eight months before the testatrix, leaving five children as her heirs. Jeremiah died after the will was made, leaving two children as his heirs.

H. A. & R. E. Shute, of Exeter, for executor. Eastman & Scammon, of Exeter, for heirs of Jeremiah. Peters, Cole, Margison & Barrett, of Haverhill, Mass., for heirs of Ellen.

WALKER, J. The language used by the testatrix indicates a purpose to give one half of the money in question to her cousin Jeremiah, or upon his decease before the death of the testatrix to his heirs, and the other half to the heirs of her cousin Ellen, whose death occurred before the will was made. The phrase, "to be divided equally among them," though not expressed with verbal precision, refers to an equal division between the two classes, consisting on the one hand of Jeremiah and his heirs, and on the other of the heirs of Ellen. The use of the words "or his heirs" are of little importance. The legacy to Jeremiah was intended to be an absolute gift, as was the legacy to Ellen's heirs. If Jeremiah had survived the testatrix, it is not probable her intention would be carried out by a construction which would give one-sixth of the money to him and five-sixths to Ellen's heirs. If such was not her intention, it follows it was not her intention that his two children surviving should only receive two-sevenths of the legacy, while Ellen's five surviving children should receive five-sevenths of it. In the absence of explanatory evidence why the testatrix desired to dispose of her property in that peculiar way, it cannot be found that she had such an intention from language in the will that does not make such a construction necessary, or that is at least open to doubt and conjecture as to its precise meaning. The cases relied upon by Ellen's heirs (Farmer v. Kimball, 46 N. H. 435, 88 Am. Dec. 219; Campbell v. Clark, 64 N. H. 328, 10 Atl. 702; Cuthbert v. Laing, 75 N. H. 304, 73 Atl. 641) are distinguishable from the present case, and are not irreconcilable with the above finding of the fact of the testatrix's intention.

For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

The result arrived at renders it unnecessary to consider the admissibility of statements made by the testatrix as to why she made the present will.

Case discharged. All concurred.

(79 N. H. 77)

CORDOPATIS v. BAKALOPOULOS.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Hillsborough. Oct. 1, 1918.)

EVIDENCE ¶455 — CONSTRUCTION OF MARRIAGE CONTRACT.

In an action for specific performance of a Greek marriage contract, evidence was admissible as to what the parties meant by "dowry."

Exceptions from Superior Court, Hillsborough County.

Bill by Christos Cordopatis against Athanasius Bakalopoulos. Judgment dismissing the complaint, and plaintiff excepts. Exceptions overruled.

Cobleigh & Theriault, of Nashua, for plaintiff. Ivory C. Eaton, of Nashua, and J. J. Hennessy, of Lowell, Mass., for defendant.

PLUMMER, J. The defendant agreed to transfer to the plaintiff certain shares of stock, to be given by reason of "dowry" to the plaintiff in consideration of the plaintiff's marriage to the defendant's daughter in accordance with the divine and holy rites of the Orthodox Eastern Church of Christ. The parties were Greeks, the contract was written in the Greek language, and was drawn by the Greek consul in his office in Boston, Mass. It was found by the master that the parties ultimately intended to return to Greece, and that they had in mind the performance of the contract in Greece more than any other place. The marriage was solemnized, and the dowry contract was made conformably to the divine and holy rites of the Orthodox Eastern Church of Christ, and according to the laws of Greece under the rules and regulations of the Greek Church.

It is contended by the defendant that by these laws, rules, and regulations dowry given by the wife's father to his son-in-law is a gift for the purpose of alleviating the burdens of marriage, to be used during the joint lives of the husband and wife, and to revert to the father in the event of the wife's death without issue. Before the bringing of this bill the plaintiff's wife died without issue. Hence it is claimed the dowry reverted to the defendant. The master found that dowry under these laws, rules, and regulations was in accordance with the defendant's contention. The evidence in the case was sufficient to support such a finding, and the finding warranted the court in dismissing the bill. The plaintiff excepted to evidence offered by the defendant as to the meaning of the term "dowry."

The question for consideration in this case was what the parties understood when they used this word in the marriage contract. What did the term "dowry" mean to them? This was a Greek marriage contract, and evidence as to what was meant by "dowry," as used in such contract, was competent. Kendall v. Green, 67 N. H. 557, 42 Atl. 173; Gill v. Ferrin, 71 N. H. 421, 424, 52 Atl. 558; Day v. Towns, 76 N. H. 200, 81 Atl. 405; New England Box Co. v. Flint, 77 N. H. 277, 90 Atl. 789; 4 Wig. Ev. §§ 2461-2465.

Exceptions overruled. All concurred.

(79 N. H. 70)

PAGE et al. v. BROOKS.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Rockingham. Oct. 1, 1918.)

1. ADJOINING LANDOWNERS ¶8—REASONABLE USE—EVIDENCE.

Ordinance prohibiting erection of garage till owner of premises obtains license from city council on petition, if valid, is competent, though not conclusive, on reasonableness of proposed use, in suit by adjoining landowner to enjoin erection without permit.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ¶601—REGULATING BUILDINGS—ORDINANCES.

City council, being authorized by Pub. St. 1901, c. 50, § 10, to regulate building, ordinance prohibiting erection of garage till owner of premises obtains license from city council, on petition giving particulars, is valid.

3. ADJOINING LANDOWNERS ¶8—REASONABLE USE.

Reasonable use of one's land, as regards rights of adjoining landowner, is what an ordinary man would do under the circumstances of the particular case.

4. ADJOINING LANDOWNERS ¶8—REASONABLE USE.

Whether one's use of his land is reasonable, as regards rights of adjoining owners, depends on whether it will deprive them of reasonable enjoyment of their property to a substantial extent, considering all the circumstances, and not on question of his negligence, in view of what he knew or ought to have known.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶842(11) — EXCEPTIONS—QUESTION OF LAW.

Exception to finding that plaintiff would suffer little damage from defendant's proposed use of his adjoining land presents no question of law.

ham County; Allen, Judge.

Suit by Calvin Page and others against Frank E. Brooks. Bill dismissed, and case transferred from superior court. Exceptions overruled in part, and in part sustained.

Bill in equity by owners of premises used for residential purposes in Portsmouth and adjoining the defendant's premises, for an injunction against his building a public garage on his land and from conducting an automobile service and repair business therein. He intends to do the acts complained of without obtaining a license for that purpose from the city council of Portsmouth, in accordance with an ordinance which provides that no person shall erect "any steam mill * * * nor establish any automobile garage, until he has presented to the city council a petition therefor setting out the proposed situation of the building and the materials of which the same is to be built, the dimensions, height, number of stories of the proposed building, * * * the height of the chimney, and the various branches of business to be carried on or proposed to be carried on in said building, and having first obtained a license therefor." The court ruled that this ordinance is invalid and not binding on the defendant, that the question involved is only one of reasonable use, and that the test is what an ordinary man would do, which is to be determined in the light of what he knows, or reasonably ought to know, about the situation, rather than in the light of all the facts, whatever they may be. The plaintiffs excepted to these rulings. The bill was dismissed as to Page because his damage would be comparatively slight, and as to the other plaintiffs because the defendant's proposed use of his premises for a public garage would not be unreasonable.

Samuel W. Emery and Calvin Page, both of Portsmouth, for plaintiffs. Scammon & Gardner, of Exeter, for defendant.

WALKER, J. [1] One question presented by the plaintiffs' exceptions to the special rulings, and to the decree dismissing the bill, is whether the city ordinance, which in substance prohibits the erection of any building in the city of Portsmouth, intended to be used as a garage for automobiles, until the owner of the premises has obtained a license therefor from the city council upon petition for the same, is admissible for any purpose in this proceeding. The court ruled that the ordinance was invalid, and not binding upon the defendant; and declined to receive it in evidence. If it was a valid ordinance, it was legitimate evidence that the threatened act of the defendant in violation of its provisions was unreasonable. It had some probative force upon the principal issue in the case, which was the reasonableness of the defendant's proposed use of his land, in view of the of his land. In Lane v. Concord, 70 N. H. 485, 49 Atl. 687, 85 Am. St. Rep. 643, it was held that, in an action for damages against a municipal corporation for creating a nuisance by dumping refuse material upon a vacant lot adjoining the plaintiff's premises, a city ordinance prohibiting the acts complained of is competent evidence upon the question of reasonable use, but not conclusive. In actions for negligence, statutes or ordinances in the nature of police regulations are regarded as admissible to show the unreasonable character of the defendant's acts. Bresnahan v. Gove, 71 N. H. 236, 239, 51 Atl. 916; Nadeau v. Sawyer, 73 N. H. 70, 59 Atl. 369; Clough v. Rockingham County Light & Power Co., 75 N. H. 84, 71 Atl. 223; Lyons v. Child, 61 N. H. 72. For a similar purpose the ordinance in question, if valid, was admissible.

[2] The only ground suggested by the defendant in support of the claim that the ordinance is void is that the recent decision in Village Precinct of Hanover v. Atkins, 78 N. H. 308, 99 Atl. 298, is a conclusive authority in his favor. In that case the by-law and the order issued thereunder was an attempted exercise by fire commissioners of delegated police power with reference to the location and use of a building as a blacksmith's shop, in an arbitrary manner and subject to no general rule or regulation. It was in excess of the legislative authorization and a substantial denial of that equality of the use and enjoyment of property which all citizens constitutionally possess. No such objection is apparent, or has been pointed out, in the ordinance which the defendant refused to comply with. It requires the petitioner to furnish certain information in regard to the general character of the proposed building, in view of which the city council, in the exercise of a reasonable discretion, may issue a license. It is authorized to regulate, not to arbitrarily prohibit, the erection of buildings. Moreover, the city council has not been asked to license the defendant to erect and use his building as a garage. Under the ordinance it might have granted a license under reasonable conditions. As it was not authorized to prohibit the erection of such a building arbitrarily (P. S. c. 50, § 10), and as it has not attempted to do so under an erroneous assumption of legislative power, the validity of the ordinance for the purpose of authorizing reasonable regulation in a particular instance cannot be doubted. There was error in the ruling of the court upon this subject.

[3] As a new trial seems to be necessary, it may be useful to consider the exception to the ruling upon the question of reasonable use of the defendant's land. The doctrine of reasonable use adopted in this state in a broad, liberal, and equitable sense is in many cases the test of the respective rights of adjoining landowners. A reasonable use of one's property in land is determined as a fact by a consideration of the nature of the use his neighbor makes of his land and the damages each would suffer from an unrestricted user by both. What an ordinary man would do under the circumstances of a particular case is perhaps a sufficiently accurate statement of the principle for practical purposes. Hamlin v. Blankenberg, 78 N. H. 258, 60 Atl. 1010; Ladd v. Brick Co., 68 N. H. 185, 186, 37 Atl. 1041; Franklin v. Durgie, 71 N. H. 186, 51 Atl. 911, 58 L. R. A. 112; Horan v. Byrnes, 72 N. H. 93, 54 Atl. 945, 62 L. R. A. 602, 101 Am. St. Rep. 670. Whether the defendant's maintenance of the proposed garage upon his premises would be unreasonable in the sense above indicated, in view of the resulting injury to the plaintiffs' property, was the issue between the parties.

[4] Upon that issue the court ruled that what an ordinary man would do is to be determined in the light of what he knows, or reasonably ought to know, about the situation, rather than in the light of all the facts, whatever they might be. From this language it is to be inferred that the court did not consider all the facts tending to show the unreasonableness of maintaining a garage on the defendant's premises, but only such facts as the defendant knew or ought to have known. It would seem that the law of negligence was applied, and that the defendant's liability was determined, as it would be in an action for the negligent use of property. But the plaintiff's right to the enjoyment of his property does not depend upon the determination of the question whether the defendant would use ordinary care in the use of his property to avoid injuring the plaintiff. As stated in Elliott v. Mason, 76 N. H. 229, 232, 81 Atl. 701, 702 (37 L. R. A. [N. S.] 357):

"When a person manages his real estate in such a way as to unreasonably interfere with the correlative right of his neighbor to a reasonable enjoyment of his land, it is no justification for the nuisance for the former to prove that he was guilty of no negligence, or that he exercised due care in what he did. The question is: Has he invaded the proprietary right of his neighbor?"

See, also, O'Brien v. Derry, 78 N. H. 198, 206, 60 Atl. 843; Lane v. Concord, 70 N. H. 485, 49 Atl. 687, 85 Am. St. Rep. 648; Wood, Nuis. § 841.

The question, therefore, in this case, is whether the defendant's proposed garage will deprive the plaintiffs of the reasonable enjoyment of their property to a substantial extent, considering all the circumstances of the situation, not whether the resulting injury is due to his negligence or his want of care in view of his knowledge of the situation. There was error in this ruling of the court.

[5] As the case is understood, the court dismissed the bill, so far as the plaintiff Page is concerned, upon the special ground that he would suffer little damage from the defendant's proposed use of his land, and that for that reason an injunction would be inequitable. The exception to this finding presents no question of law and must be overruled.

Exceptions by Page overruled. Exceptions by the other plaintiffs sustained. All concurred.

(117 Me. 497)

SMITH v. SOMERSET TRACTION CO.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Oct. 31, 1918.)

1. STREET RAILROADS § 99(13) — COLLISION WITH MOTOR TRUCK—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Where collision between street car and plaintiff's motor sprinkling truck, on track in order to refill, was caused by driver's contributory negligence in failing to look out for approaching car until just before he went on track, when his view was obstructed by truck itself, plaintiff could not recover damage to truck.

2. STREET RAILROADS § 103(3) — COLLISION ON TRACK—LAST CLEAR CHANCE.

Where collision between street car and motor sprinkling truck followed on turning of truck onto track, when motorman used every reasonable effort to avoid accident, doctrine of last clear chance was without application to give owner of truck right of action against street railroad, despite truck driver's contributory negligence.

On Motion from Supreme Judicial Court, Somerset County, at Law.

Action by Harold E. Smith against the Somerset Traction Company. Verdict for plaintiff. On motion for new trial in the Supreme Judicial Court. Motion sustained.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Fred F. Lawrence, of Skowhegan, for plaintiff. Butler & Butler, of Skowhegan, for defendant.

CORNISH, C. J. The plaintiff seeks to recover for damages caused to his motor sprinkling truck, driven by one Boothby, in collision with a car of the defendant. The accident occurred on August 19, 1917, on Madison avenue in the town of Skowhegan. The driver of the truck entered Madison avenue from Pleasant street on the west, crossed the track of the defendant, and proceeded in a northerly direction on the easterly side of the track and three or four feet therefrom until he was opposite the standpipe from which he was to refill the sprinkler. He then swung the front end of the truck onto the track, put on his brakes, and stopped, preparatory to reversing his gears and backing up to the standpipe. Before he was off the track, the sprinkler was struck by the electric car which had come up Madison avenue in the same direction as the truck.

[1] The driver's own story of the accident proves such negligence on his part as precludes recovery.

As he was proceeding up Madison avenue, he was free and clear of any car that might overtake him. The moment he turned toward the track, he was approaching possible peril. It then became his duty to use reasonable efforts to ascertain whether a car was coming from behind. When he left Pleasant street, he glanced down Madison avenue the short distance of two lots, and says he saw no car. He did not look again until just before he turned onto the track, when he looked over his shoulder; but the body of the sprinkler obstructed his view, so that he could see a distance of only 15 or 20 feet along the track, which was about the length of the truck itself. With that restricted view he admits that he turned directly on to the track, and the collision followed. This certainly was not the conduct of a reasonably prudent man concerned for his personal safety. It was a clear case of contributory negligence. Perhaps the presence of a companion riding with him simply for pleasure may throw some light upon the degree of watchfulness he was exercising.

[2] To relieve himself from this predicament, the plaintiff invokes the last clear chance doctrine, and argues a subsequent and independent negligence on the part of the motorman of the electric car, after the truck had reached its perilous position. The evidence wholly fails to warrant the application of that doctrine. The collision followed close on the turning of the truck, and the motorman of the electric car then used every reasonable effort to avoid the accident. The driver's negligence actively continued from its commencement up to the moment of collision, and this case is governed by Butler v. Railway, 99 Me. 160, 58 Atl. 775, 105 Am. St. Rep. 267; Philbrick v. Railway, 107 Me. 429, 78 Atl. 481; and McKinnon v. Railway, 116 Me. 289, 101 Atl. 452.

The verdict is so manifestly contrary to the law and the evidence that it should not stand.

Motion sustained.

(117 Me. 409)

KNOX v. COBURN.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Oct. 31, 1918.)

1. CORPORATIONS — §181(8) — RIGHTS OF STOCKHOLDER — INSPECTION OF BOOKS — BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where officer of corporation refuses to permit stockholder to inspect books and copy minutes and names of stockholders upon ground that stockholder's motive in so doing is improper, and stockholder brings action to compel officer to permit such inspection, the burden of proving that stockholder's motive is improper is upon officer.

2. CORPORATIONS — §181(1) — RIGHTS OF STOCKHOLDER — INSPECTION OF BOOKS.

Member of stock-selling firm, who buys stock in corporation for purpose of securing names of all the holders of such stock, has the right, under Rev. St. c. 51, § 22, to inspect the stockbooks and make list of stockholders for use in selling such stock; his motive in obtaining such list not being improper, vexatious, or unlawful.

Exceptions from Supreme Judicial Court, Androscoggin County, at Law.

Petition for mandamus by Herbert D. Knox against James B. Coburn. Writ ordered, and defendant excepts. Exceptions overruled.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and WILSON, JJ.

Ralph W. Crockett, of Lewiston, for plaintiff. McGillicuddy & Morey, of Lewiston, for defendant.

CORNISH, C. J. This is a petition brought by a stockholder of the Androscoggin Mills, of Lewiston, Me., for a writ of mandamus commanding the respondent, the clerk of the corporation, to allow him to inspect the stockbook, to take copies and minutes therefrom of such parts as concern his interests, and to make a list of the stockholders, their residences, and the amount of stock held by each.

The respondent admits the right of the petitioner to inspect the books, but denies him the right to make copies of the books and of the list of stockholders.

R. S. c. 51, § 22, provides that the corporate records and stockbook "shall be open at all reasonable hours to the inspection of persons interested, who may take copies and minutes therefrom of such parts, as concern their interests," etc.

The sitting justice, after full hearing, granted the petition and ordered the peremptory writ of mandamus to issue. The case is before the law court on defendant's exceptions to this ruling.

The opinion filed by the, sitting justice covers so fully and so discriminately the facts and the law involved in this matter that we adopt it as the opinion of the court. That opinion is as follows:

The petitioner bases his application upon section 22 of chapter 51 of the Revised Statutes, and asks that a peremptory writ issue to the respondent, commanding him to allow the petitioner to inspect the stockbook of the Androscoggin Mills and to take copies and minutes therefrom of such parts as concern the petitioner's interests, and to make a list of the stockholders of said corporation, their residences, and the amount of stock held by each.

In previous decisions of this court (White v. Manter, 109 Me. 409, 84 Atl. 890, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 332; Withington v. Bradley, 111 Me. 386, 89 Atl. 201; Eaton v. Manter, 114 Me. 260, 95 Atl. 948) it has been held that this statute, so far as the right of inspection is concerned, adds to the common-law rights of a stockholder and removes some of the common-law limitations, and that it gives the stockholder an absolute and unlimited right to inspect the corporate records and the list of stockholders, whatever may be his motive or purpose in seeking to exercise it, and that it is not necessary to state in his application or prove the reasons for his application to inspect such records. The right to take copies and minutes therefrom is, however, limited to such parts as concern the interest of the stockholder making the application, and that limitation is recognized by the prayer of the petition in this case. It has further been held that a list of stockholders concerns a stockholder's interest, and that he has a right to take a copy of the list, irrespective of his motive or purpose.

The court, however, has been careful to say that the character of the remedy sought by application for a writ of mandamus, and the discretion to be exercised by the court in issuing it, seems not to have been taken away or abridged by the statute, and that a state of facts might be presented where the purpose of the petitioner was so obviously vexatious, improper, or unlawful that the court might feel compelled to exercise its discretion and decline to issue the writ.

[1] It will not be presumed that the motive of the stockholder is an improper one, and, if the motive or purpose is charged to be otherwise, the burden is upon the officer refusing the request, or on the corporation, to establish it. Stone v. Kellogg, 165 Ill. 192, 46 N. E. 222, 56 Am. St. Rep. 240; State v. Pacific Brewing Co., 21 Wash. 451, 58 Pac. 584, 47 L. R. A. 208; Foster v. White, 86 Ala. 467, 6 South. 88.

The respondent has filed a return to the alternative writ, stating his reasons for not complying with the request of the petitioner. Treating the allegations of this return as statements of fact, and not of opinion or belief, the allegations of paragraphs 6 and 7, so far as they relate to the purposes of the petitioner, are not sustained by the evidence. In paragraph 6 of the return the respondent states his belief "that it is the intention of said Herbert D. Knox to endeavor to use the information for his sole benefit in the buying and selling of the stock of the Androscoggin Mills, and that such act would be detrimental to the best interests of the corporation and its stockholders."

It appears by the evidence before me that the petitioner first made application to the treasurer of the Androscoggin Mills for a list of the stockholders to which Mr. De Normandie replied, under date of June 22, 1918: "If you will let me know by return mail any specific reason that you may have for desiring this list, I shall be glad to take the matter under consideration." In reply Mr. Knox states: "I beg to advise you that I desire this list for the use only by myself in connection with the firm of Charles A. Day & Co. for the purpose of facilitating the purchase or sale of this stock, as by having a list of stockholders when occasion arises I can communicate with them direct either as to purchase or sale should I so wish." To this letter Mr. De Normandie replied: "I have given your letter careful consideration, and have been advised that I should not disclose the stockholders' names under the circumstances to which your letter refers. We have always refused such requests and think that we ought not to change our custom."

In his testimony upon examination Mr. Knox testified as follows:

"Q. Your purpose in buying a share of stock, as I said before, was for your own private business, to buy and sell the stockholders or anybody else you could get to buy?"

"A. In connection with the firm of Charles A. Day & Co.

"Q. And in selling that stock, of course, you sell to people other than stockholders, or try to sell it, don't you?"

"A. Not at all times; no.

"Q. You do sometimes?"

"A. Once in a while. For instance, we may in the Androscoggin, if there should happen to be 200 or 300 shares offered for sale, we might circularize it."

It appears from the evidence before me that the petitioner is connected with the firm of Charles A. Day & Co., of Boston, and that that firm makes a specialty of dealing in unlisted and inactive stocks and bonds, and that the share of stock standing in the name of the petitioner was purchased by that firm, that Mr. Knox might have the status of a stockholder in the Androscoggin Mills and such rights as attach thereto. It further appears that this firm makes it a practice to obtain lists of stockholders of corporations in the stock of which it deals; that these lists are for its own exclusive use; that they are not sold or even loaned to brokers or other dealers; that they are used as mailing lists in sending out circulars offering to buy or to sell stock in various corporations. Copies of the circulars issued by this firm were put in evidence, without objection, and seem to be unobjectionable in form. I fail to see where in the purpose which Mr. Knox intends to make of the lists of stockholders is in any way improper, vexatious, or unlawful. In Withington v. Bradley, supra, the court found that the evidence failed to disclose any unlawful purpose, and that the power of the court to issue the peremptory writ was properly exercised. The report of that case does not show the evidence upon which this finding was based, but as supporting that view the court cited the case of State v. Middlesex Banking Co., 87 Conn. 483, on page 489, 88 Atl. 861, on page 863, a case which is so parallel in its facts with the present case that I quote from the opinion of the court:

"The primary charge brought against the relator in the return centers about his business as a stockbroker. It is asserted that he ought not to be admitted to an examination of the stockbooks because he became a stockholder for the purpose of trading in its shares, and that his controlling purpose in seeking access to the stockbooks is that he, by means of the information obtained, may more effectively carry on that business and more extensively and successfully buy and sell the company's shares for profit to himself. We fail to discover what harm or loss can threaten either the company or its stockholders from the relator's operations as a buyer and seller of its stock, however active or general they might become, of so grave a character as to call for judicial protection from the exercise of the statutory right. Such operations are not hostile to the corporation, have nothing wrong, unjust, illegitimate, or unlawful about them, and the desire to advance them in honorable ways, although ulterior to the interests of the corporation and stock ownership, has no taint of impropriety about it."

In his testimony Mr. Coburn expresses concern that if the writ were granted annoyance to the stockholders might result. It is difficult to see how such a result would follow. The creation of a wider market for the stock cannot certainly be detrimental to the stockholders' interest, and any information as to stock being offered for sale, or of opportunity to sell stock to persons desiring to purchase, would naturally be to the stockholders' interest. The corporation has within its power to very effectively guard the stockholders against any deception, if such should be attempted, by distributing to its stockholders printed statements of its financial condition in such form as to afford full information. It seems that in the case of this particular corporation it has not been the practice so to do. Referring to a similar claim the court in State v. Middlesex Banking Co., says:

"But whatever evil incidents might be expected to attend the policy of limited publicity enacted into the law, and assuming that the allegations conform to the fact, we must presume that the General Assembly took them into account and weighed them against the anti-adopted, they are inherent in the system, and do not arise from exceptional cases of misuse or abuse. If we were to say that the right given by statute should not be enforced for the reason that harmful results might follow, we should be usurping the functions of the legislative department in making practical repeal of the statute and transgressing the comparatively narrow limits of proper judicial action already indicated."

I have carefully examined the cases cited by respondents' counsel in his brief. They do not seem to controvert the positions taken in this opinion, but it may be said of them that such cases arose in states where a more limited policy seems to prevail than prevails in states having statutory provisions similar to those found here.

[2] Peremptory writ of mandamus may issue, commanding the said James E. Coburn to allow the said Herbert D. Knox to inspect the stock-book of the Androscoggin Mills and take copies and minutes therefrom of such parts as concern his interests, and to make a list of the stockholders of said corporation, their residences, and the amount of stock held by each.

The entry must therefore be:
Exceptions overruled.

(117 Me. 415)

SWEENEY v. HIGGINS.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Nov. 4, 1918.)

1. LIBEL AND SLANDER §101(4)—BURDEN OF PROOF—CONDITIONALLY PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

In an action on the case for libel, where the charges are conditionally privileged communications, the burden of proving malice by affirmative evidence rests on plaintiff.

2. LIBEL AND SLANDER §48(2)—PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS—PUBLIC OFFICIALS OR EMPLOYÉS.

No action lies to a petition or communication imputing want of integrity or other ground of unfitness to a public official or employé, who is subject to removal by the authority to whom the communication is addressed, if made in good faith and without malice.

3. LIBEL AND SLANDER §101(4)—CHARGES AGAINST PUBLIC OFFICIALS—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where charges against a police officer on the ground of official misconduct were made to the mayor and city government, which had power of revocation and removal, it will be presumed that the charges were preferred without malice and from a sense of official responsibility.

4. LIBEL AND SLANDER §51(5)—PRIVILEGE—MALICE.

Actual malice in making a charge against a public official cannot be inferred, simply because the charges are false.

Agreed Statement from Supreme Judicial Court, Cumberland County, at Law.

Action by Charles E. Sweeney against Fred W. Higgins, submitted to law court upon an agreed statement of facts. Judgment for defendant.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

William A. Connellan, of Portland, for plaintiff. Jacob H. Berman, of Portland, and CORNISH, C. J. This is an action on the case for libel, brought by a police officer of South Portland against an alderman of the same city, and is submitted to the law court upon an agreed statement of facts.

The alleged libel is based upon the following written charges which were presented by the defendant against the plaintiff:

"To the Honorable Mayor and City Government of South Portland:

"Respectfully represents Fred W. Higgins, of South Portland, who gives this body to understand that Charles E. Sweeney, of said South Portland, has been acting as an officer of said South Portland; that he has been unmindful of his duty; that he has attempted to extort money from the city of South Portland, by attempting to collect for services after having been paid by the Cumberland County Power & Light Company. Wherefore your petitioner prays that the said Sweeney may be ordered to appear and show cause why he should not be discharged from the force.

"Dated at South Portland this eighth day of August, A. D. 1918.

"[Signed] Fred W. Higgins."

It is admitted that the defendant, while an alderman and at a meeting of that board, presided over by the mayor, presented the foregoing charges; that at the time in question police officers of that city were appointed by the mayor, and his appointments were confirmed by the board of aldermen; and that after these charges were preferred an investigation was had, and the plaintiff was exonerated. It does not affirmatively appear that these officers were subject to removal by the mayor and aldermen; but such is the fair inference, from the fact that the appointment was made by the mayor, subject to confirmation by the aldermen (Andrews v. King, 77 Me. 224), and from the further fact that this communication was addressed to them, and cognizance thereof was taken, as an investigation leading to exoneration was subsequently made.

[1] These admitted facts bring the written charges within the class of what is known as conditionally privileged communications, which are not actionable, unless proved to be malicious, and the burden of proving malice by affirmative evidence rests upon the plaintiff. No evidence of malice is submitted by the plaintiff in this case. The burden is not met. The condition is not removed.

[2] It is a settled principle of the law of libel that no action lies for a petition or communication imputing want of integrity, or other ground of unfitness, to a public official or employé, who is subject to removal by the board or officer to whom the petition or communication is addressed, provided such communication is made in good faith, and without malice. 17 R. C. L. § 110; Jozsa v. Moroney, 125 La. 813, 51 South. 908, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1041, 19 Ann. Cas. 1193, and note;

Farr v. Valentine, 38 App. D. C. 413, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 821, and note; Tyree v. Harrison, 100 Va. 540, 42 S. E. 295; Blakeslee v. Carroll, 64 Conn. 223, 29 Atl. 473, 25 L. R. A. 106; Kent v. Bongartz, 15 R. I. 72, 22 Atl. 1023, 2 Am. St. Rep. 870. And see Bradford v. Clark, 90 Me. 298, 38 Atl. 229.

[3] This rule rests upon sound public policy. It tends to honesty and fidelity in the conduct of public affairs. It renders subordinates more amenable for their derelictions to the superior power which is responsible for their acts. It carefully guards against charges made in bad faith and from malicious motives, on the one hand, while shielding the writer from charges made honestly and from a sense of public duty, on the other. The case at bar comes within this rule. Not only were the charges made to a body having the power of investigation and removal, but they were put forth by one who was himself a member of that body at the time, upon whom rested in part the responsibility for the acts of the subordinate. The presumption is that the charges were preferred without malice and from a sense of official responsibility, and there is no evidence to rebut this presumption.

[4] It appears that upon investigation the plaintiff was exonerated, from which fact, perhaps, it might be reasonably inferred that the charges were not proven to be true. But actual malice cannot be inferred, simply because of the falsity of the charges. "It is well settled that falsity alone is not enough. The author or authors of the communication may make it, and press it upon the attention of others, honestly believing it to be true, and acting from the purest and highest of motives, when in fact it is false, and therefore actual malice is not to be inferred from falsity." Kent v. Bongartz, 15 R. I. 72, 22 Atl. 1023, 2 Am. St. Rep. 870, and cases cited.

The application of these familiar principles to the admitted facts in this case requires that the mandate be—

Judgment for defendant.

(117 Me. 413)

ARCHIBALD v. ORDER OF UNITED COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Nov. 4, 1918.)

1. INSURANCE ~~§~~461(6)—INSURED'S LIABILITY—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In actions on insurance contracts, the burden is on defendant to prove the exemption which it sets up in defense.

2. INSURANCE ~~§~~461(3)—INSURED'S LIABILITY—"VOLUNTARY EXPOSURE TO DANGER."

In an action on an insurance contract exempting from liability if death was incurred from voluntary exposure to danger, facts held to show that insured, struck by locomotive while walking on railroad track, died by "voluntary exposure to danger"; such exposure being an intentional act which reasonable and ordinary prudence would pronounce dangerous.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Voluntary Exposure.]

3. INSURANCE ~~§~~461(3)—INSURED'S LIABILITY—EXPOSURE TO DANGER—CUSTOM.

In action on insurance policy wherein liability for death from involuntary exposure to danger was exempted, where insured was killed by locomotive while walking on a railroad track, it was immaterial that others were accustomed to use the same track.

Exceptions from Supreme Judicial Court, Androscoggin County, at Law.

Action by Lucetta W. Archibald against the Order of United Commercial Travelers. Verdict for plaintiff, and defendant excepta. Exceptions sustained.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

McGillicuddy & Morey, of Lewiston, for plaintiff. George C. Wing and George O. Wing, Jr., both of Auburn, and John A. Millener, of Columbus, Ohio, for defendant.

CORNISH, C. J. On January 2, 1914, the defendant issued to the plaintiff's husband, Ernest U. Archibald, a certificate of insurance in the sum of $6,300, payable to the plaintiff as beneficiary in case of death occasioned by bodily injury effected through external, violent, and accidental means; subject, however, to certain provisions, conditions and requirements contained in the constitution of the order. On January 31, 1914, Mr. Archibald was struck and killed by a locomotive while walking on the tracks of the Maine Central Railroad Company in the city of Lewiston. This suit was brought to recover the amount due under the certificate, and, after a verdict for the plaintiff, is now before this court on defendant's exceptions. A large number of exceptions was reserved; but it is necessary to consider only one, the refusal of the presiding justice to direct a verdict for the defendant. We think this direction should have been given.

The constitution of the defendant order contains many exemptions. Among others, it is provided that the benefits under the certificate shall not cover any death, disability, or loss resulting from "self-destruction (while sane or insane)," "the violation of any law," "or from voluntary exposure to danger." Each of these defenses is set up by the defendant, and in this class of cases the burden is on the defendant to prove the existence of facts which create the exemption.

[1] In ordinary actions for personal injuries, the burden is upon the plaintiff to prove his due care; but, in an action upon the contract of insurance, it devolves upon the defendant to prove the exemption which it sets up in defense. Keene v. New Eng. Acc. Ass'n, 161 Mass. 149, 36 N. E. 891; Garcelon

v. Commercial Travelers' Ass'n, 195 Mass. 531, 81 N. E. 201, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 961.

The defense of suicide was not made out. No such inference could reasonably be drawn from the facts and circumstances as disclosed by the evidence.

The defense of violation of law is based upon R. S. c. 57, § 67, which provides as follows:

"Whoever without right, stands or walks on a railroad track or bridge, or passes over such bridge except by railroad conveyance, forfeits not less than five, nor more than twenty dollars, to be recovered by complaint."

[2] We will not discuss the application of this statute to the claimed exemption further than we may do so incidentally in connection with the next ground. The third defense, based on "voluntary exposure to danger," is abundantly proved, and is a full and complete bar to the maintenance of this action.

The material facts are not in controversy. Mr. Archibald and his wife were residents of Poland. On the day of the accident they had come to Lewiston from Portland, arriving in Lewiston shortly before noon. They transacted some business at the Lewiston Trust Company, dined together at a restaurant, and then separated; Archibald going to an employment agency for the purpose of securing men for his lumbering operations. These were obtained, and, according to the testimony of the agent, Archibald left the agency stating that he had a little business down street, and would return about quarter past one, in season to take the men up to the 1:45 p. m. train for Rumford. He was next seen by the gate tender at the Chestnut street crossing as he was passing that crossing on the tracks, shortly before the accident, and then by the engineer and fireman of the regular 12:40 train out of the Lewiston Lower Station on its way to Brunswick. The train had reached a point several hundred feet from the station and between the Avon and Androscoggin Mills, when the engineer and fireman saw Archibald walking in the same direction in which the train was moving and beside the track. When the engine was within about 35 feet from him, Archibald, without looking back, started to run across the track, took two or three steps between the rails, threw up his hands, fell, and was caught by the pilot. Evidently he was not aware of the approaching train until that moment, and then in his confusion, or perhaps with the thought of crossing to a safer position, he was struck and killed. Such, in brief, are the circumstances attending the accident.

This brings us to the interpretation of the clause "voluntary exposure to danger." What is its meaning as used in this contract of indemnity? A definition so accurate in detail and yet so comprehensive in scope as to meet all cases it is difficult, if not impossible, to formulate, and yet the essential elements can be stated.

The term is not synonymous with lack of due care or contributory negligence. To give it that broad construction would make of an accident policy a delusive snare. Many of the accidents of life are attributable to the want of due care on the part of the injured person. They may result from inadvertence, from "thoughtless inattention," and yet they are within the contemplation of the contract. A mere passive negligence is not sufficient to constitute voluntary exposure to danger. It must ordinarily be active in its nature. The word "voluntary" implies an act of the will.

It may therefore be said, speaking generally, that to render one guilty of voluntary exposure to danger he must have intentionally done some act which reasonable and ordinary prudence would pronounce dangerous, one which an ordinarily prudent man of common intelligence would know to be dangerous. The term implies both an intention to perform the act and a conscious willingness to take the risk which is obviously connected with it. The application of this definition to the case at bar brings it clearly within the inhibition.

[3] Mr. Archibald, in walking along the railroad tracks in the city of Lewiston, was voluntarily and unnecessarily walking in an admittedly dangerous place. The peril was open and plain, his exposure to it was voluntary, and he was injured by the very risk which he had chosen to take. The precise injury happened which there was reason to fear. The liability of passing trains was no hidden danger, but an apparent one. He was in fact a trespasser. Copp v. Maine Central R. Co., 100 Me. 568, 62 Atl. 735. The company itself had posted a sign in that vicinity calling attention to the penalty under R. S. c. 57, § 67, for walking, without right, on the track or bridge. The fact that others were accustomed to take the same course is immaterial in this action against the insurance company. Piper v. Mercantile Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 161 Mass. 589, 37 N. E. 759; Osgood v. United States Acc. Co., 76 N. H. 475, 84 Atl. 50, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 425.

In reaching the conclusion that the facts bring this case at bar within the exemption, we are in accord with the authorities which are numerous, and a few of which we cite. These, of course, differ in their facts, but they are analogous in principle, and in some of them the clause in the policy would require even stronger evidence against the plaintiff than that under consideration here. Cornish v. Acc. Ins. Co., L. R. 23, Q. B. Div. 453; Glass v. Fraternal Acc. Ass'n (C. C.) 112 Fed. 495; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Jones, 80 Ga. 541, 7 S. E. 83, 12 Am. St. Rep. 270; Small v. Travelers' Protect. Ass'n, 118 Ga. 900, 45 S. E. 706, 63 L. R. A. 510; Follis v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 94 Iowa, 435, 62 N. W. 807, 28 L. R. A. 78, 58 Am. St. Rep. 408; Smith v. Prof. Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 104 Mich. 634, 62 N. W. 990; Alter v. Union Casualty & Surety Co., 108 Mo. App. 169, 83 S. W. 276; note to Hunt v. United States Acc. Ass'n, 148

Mich. 521, 109 N. W. 1042, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 938, 117 Am. St. Rep. 655, 10 Ann. Cas. 451; note to Bakalars v. Continental Casualty Co., 141 Wis. 43, 122 N. W. 721, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1241, 18 Ann. Cas. 1125; Tuttle v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 134 Mass. 175, 45 Am. Rep. 316; Willard v. Masonic Acc. Ass'n, 169 Mass. 288, 47 N. E. 1006, 61 Am. St. Rep. 285; Garcelon v. Commercial Trav. Ass'n, 195 Mass. 531, 81 N. E. 201, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 961.

This case is distinguishable from Keene v. N. E. Mutual Acc. Ass'n, 161 Mass. 149, 36 N. E. 891, confidently relied upon by the plaintiff, as in that case, to quote the opinion, "the deceased was not attempting to walk upon the track, or to remain upon it; but he was simply crossing, at a quick pace. He was hit, not by an engine with its noise, but by a detached car, which had been kicked along there, the sight of which was cut off by his umbrella." The other Massachusetts cases above cited are more closely in point.

Our conclusion therefore is that the plaintiff cannot recover, and that the request for an ordered verdict for the defendant should have been given.

Exceptions sustained.

(117 Me. 486)

SCOTT'S CASE.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Nov. 12, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT §388—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—FAILURE OF DEPENDENTS.

In a proceeding for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act by the deserted wife and also by the mistress of deceased, the fact that the wife was wholly dependent on deceased, and that the illegitimate children of the mistress and deceased were also wholly dependent on him, did not necessitate a disposal of the case under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 13, as though there were no dependents, on the theory that the condition was one not contemplated by the statute.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT §388—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—"DESERTION"—"DEPENDENTS."

A deserted wife, who has subsequent to her desertion been guilty of adultery, is not a "dependent" of her husband, within Rev. St. c. 50, § 1, subd. 8(a); "desertion" under the act having its usual meaning in connection with marital relations.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Dependent; Desertion.]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT §388—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—DEPENDENTS—ILLEGITIMATE CHILDREN.

Illegitimate children of a decedent are not conclusively presumed to be dependent on him, within Rev. St. c. 50, § 1, subd. 8(c), under the rule, "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius."

4. MASTER AND SERVANT §388—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—"FAMILY"—"DEPENDENTS."

Illegitimate children of a deceased employé living with decedent and their mother are "dependents" of decedent within Workmen's Compensation Act, as part of his family; a "family" being a collective body of persons who live in one house under a head or manager who has a legal or moral duty to support the members thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Family.]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT §348—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

The Workmen's Compensation Act will be construed liberally with a view to carrying out its general purpose and not strictly as other statutes in derogation of the common law.

6. MASTER AND SERVANT §346—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—CONSTRUCTION.

The general purpose of the Workmen's Compensation Act is to transfer the burdens resulting from industrial accidents from the individual to the industry, to be finally distributed upon society as a whole by compelling the industry through the employer to contribute to the support of those who are lawfully dependent upon deceased for sustenance during his lifetime.

Appeal from Supreme Judicial Court, Penobscot County, at Law.

Proceedings by Mabel Scott and another under the Workmen's Compensation Act for compensation for the death of Harry Scott, opposed by the Eastern Manufacturing Company, employer, and the American Mutual Liability Company, insurer. From a decree of a single justice in accordance with the findings of the chairman of the Industrial Accident Commission, claimant, Mabel Scott, the employer, and the insurer all appeal. Appeals dismissed, and decree affirmed.

Argued before CORNISH, O. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, MORRILL, DEASY, and WILSON, JJ.

Harold H. Murchie, of Calais, and Burleigh Martin, of Augusta, for Mabel Scott. Emery & Waterhouse, of Biddeford, for Eastern Mfg. Co. and American Mut. Liability Co. Frederick B. Dodd and Lawrence V. Jones, both of Bangor, for defendants.

WILSON, J. This is an appeal from the decree of a single justice in accordance with the findings of the chairman of the Industrial Accident Commission under section 34 of chapter 50, R. S., known as the Workmen's Compensation Act.

On the 24th day of September, 1917, one Harry Scott received an injury while in the employ of the Eastern Manufacturing Company from which death resulted on the following day. Following his death, two claimants filed petitions with the Industrial Accident Commission claiming to be dependents under the act, viz. Mabel St. Clair Scott, claiming to be the lawful wife of the deceased whom he had deserted, and one by Rachel S. Scott, also claiming to be the wife of the deceased and dependent upon him for her support, but whose claim has been abandoned by counsel. The petition of Rachel S. Scott, however, was later amended to include the minor children of said Rachel S. Scott, viz. Irene F., Stanley W., Harry J., and Donald F., aged ten, seven and four years, and one year and nine months, respectively.

After a hearing, the chairman of the Industrial Commission found from the evidence submitted that Harry Scott received the injury which caused his death in the course of his employment, and that at the time of his injury his "average weekly wage" computed according to subdivision 9 of section 1 of the act was $15 a week, and that his dependents were therefore entitled to $7.50 per week for a period of 300 weeks. So far there seems to be no dispute between the several parties to these proceedings.

The questions raised under this appeal are upon the chairman's rulings as to who the dependents of Harry Scott were at the time of the injury and so entitled to the benefits. Subdivision 8 of section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act (chapter 50, R. S.) defines "dependents" as follows:

"Dependents" shall mean members of the employe's family or next of kin, who are wholly or partly dependent upon the earnings of the employe for support at the time of the injury."

It then provides that—

"The following persons shall be conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent for support upon a deceased employe:

"(a) A wife upon a husband with whom she lives, or from whom she was living apart for a justifiable cause, or because he had deserted her or upon whom she is dependent at the time of the accident."

"(c) A child or children, including adopted and step children under the age of eighteen years (or over said age, but physically or mentally incapacitated from earning) upon the parent with whom he is or they are living, or upon whom he is or they are dependent at the time of the death of said parent, there being no surviving * * * parent."

Bearing upon the question of dependency, the chairman of the commission, from an agreed statement signed by counsel for all claimants, found the following facts which appear to be undisputed by either the employer or the insurer:

Henry Scott was lawfully married to the claimant Mabel St. Clair Scott February 17, 1901, but deserted her after three years of married life. Since the desertion he has never contributed anything toward her support. One child, Herbert Scott, aged sixteen years, was born of this lawful union. Five years after the desertion, there was born to Mabel St. C. Scott an illegitimate child, Ruth, aged nine years at the time of the hearing.

After the desertion of his wife, Mabel St. C. Scott, Harry Scott, at least ten years before his death, formed an illicit union with one Rachel Somers, who is named in the petition as Rachel S. Scott. The four children named in the petition of Rachel S. Scott the chairman finds from the agreed statement of counsel to be the illegitimate children of Harry Scott and Rachel Somers, and were members of his family, and it appears to be assumed in the agreed statement of counsel and in all the discussion and findings of the chairman that they were all known under the family name of Scott.

Upon these admitted facts the chairman of the commission ruled that the four children of Harry Scott and Rachel Somers Scott were members of his family and his next of kin and were wholly dependent upon him for their support at the time of the injury; that Mabel St. C. Scott was not a member of his family, nor dependent upon him for support; that Rachel S. Scott by reason of the illicit union could not be a dependent under the act; and therefore the four minor illegitimate children of Harry Scott and Rachel S. Scott, being the only dependents, were entitled to all the benefits under the act. From the decree of the justice rendered in accordance with this decision as required under section 34 of chapter 50, R. S., the claimant Mabel St. C. Scott, the employer, and the insurer all appeal. The contentions of the several parties, and we state the facts and contentions of parties at length owing to the questions of first impression raised by this case under the act, are as follows:

1. Mabel St. C. Scott claims that the chairman of the commission erred in ruling that she was not a dependent of Harry Scott at the time of the injury, inasmuch as she was his lawful wife and had been deserted by him, and by the express terms of the statute is conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent upon the deceased husband for her support; that the illegitimate children of Harry Scott were not members of his family or his next of kin, because their father and mother were living together contrary to law, and are not within the purview of subdivision 8 (c) of chapter 50, R. S., which she contends refers only to legitimate, adopted, and step children.

2. Counsel for the illegitimate minor children of Harry Scott and Rachel S. Scott contend that, while they may not be conclusively presumed to be dependent under paragraph (a) of subdivision 8 of section 1 of the act, yet they were members of the family of Harry Scott within the meaning of the act, and were as a matter of fact wholly dependent upon him at the time of his death; and that the former wife by her act of adultery had terminated the running of her husband's desertion and had thereby taken herself out of the class conclusively presumed to be dependent and was not at the time of his death a member of his family, or, at least, was not dependent upon him in fact.

[1] 3. Counsel for the employer and insurer join with counsel for each claimant and agree each is correct in his contention, viz. that Mabel St. C. Scott as the lawful deserted wife was wholly dependent upon the deceased, and that the four children of Harry Scott and Rachel S. Scott were also wholly dependent upon him; but that such a condition was not contemplated by the statute, and therefore the case must be disposed of under section 13 of the act as though there were no dependents.

We must reject the contention of counsel for the employer and insurer as wholly contrary to the spirit and "general purpose" of the law. Coakley's Case, 216 Mass. 71, 102 N. E. 980, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 887.

[2] We sustain the ruling of the chairman of the commission that Mabel St. O. Scott was not a dependent of Harry Scott at the time of the injury, though not for the reasons assigned by the chairman in his decree. The chairman appears to find that, inasmuch as Mabel St. O. Scott was no longer living with the deceased and was not in fact dependent upon him for support, the conclusive presumption of the statute arising from her marriage to the deceased and his desertion of her is overcome. If there were no other facts in the case than her marriage and his desertion, we think the presumption of her dependency could not be overcome by evidence, but is conclusive. Greenleaf, Ev. (16th Ed.) vol. 1, § 15; Nelson's Case, 217 Mass. 467, 470, 105 N. E. 857, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 862. The fact of whether she was or not actually a member of his family or dependent upon him for support would then be immaterial.

Another fact, however, appears in this case, which we think takes Mabel St. O. Scott out of the class conclusively presumed to be dependent and places her in the class that requires proof, and that is her act of adultery after being deserted by her husband. Her counsel do not deny that by that act she would be precluded from obtaining a divorce on the ground of desertion. We think the word "desertion" as used in this connection has its usual meaning when used in connection with marital relations. Desertion as a ground for divorce must continue up to the time of filing the libel, and involves not only the wilful abandonment without just cause, or the consent of the other party, but also the continued refusal to return without justification. If the deserted party at any time furnishes just cause for the one deserting refusing to return, or by his or her acts consents to the separation, desertion as a wilful and unjustifiable abandonment of one party by the other and as a ground of divorce ceases. Ford v. Ford, 148 Mass. 577, 10 N. E. 474; Whippen v. Whippen, 147 Mass. 294, 17 N. E. 644. Without a conclusive presumption in her favor, Mabel St. O. Scott, though she was one of the deceased's next of kin, or even if within the meaning of the act was still a member of his family, has no standing in this case, as it is admitted that she was not dependent upon him in fact. Nelson's Case, 217 Mass. 467, 105 N. E. 857, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 862; Newman's Case, 222 Mass. 568, 111 N. E. 359, L. R. A. 1916C, 1145; Fierro's Case, 223 Mass. 878, 111 N. E. 957; Veber's Case, 224 Mass. 86, 112 N. E. 485.

It is not necessary to decide whether the illegitimate children of Harry Scott were his next of kin, since, in this case, the only ground upon which it could be claimed that they were his next of kin would be because they had become his heirs under section 3, c. 80, R. S., by being adopted into his family. Morton v. Morton, 62 Neb. 420, 87 N. W. 182. If they were members of his family at the time of his death, for that reason alone, being wholly dependent upon him in fact, they would be entitled to the benefits of the act.

[3] We do not think that illegitimate children come within the class defined in paragraph (c) of subdivision 8 of section 1 of chapter 50, R. S., and so are conclusively presumed to be dependents of a deceased parent. Notwithstanding the rule of liberal construction expressly enjoined upon those interpreting the act, the application of the familiar rule of construction, "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius," seems to us upon reason and authority to be proper in this instance. Lyon v. Lyon, 88 Me. 395, 34 Atl. 180; Hall v. Cressey, 92 Me. 514, 516, 43 Atl. 118; Bell v. Terry & Tench Co., 177 App. Div. 123, 163 N. Y. Supp. 733.

[4] The determining factor in this case is: Were these illegitimate children members of the family of Harry Scott at the time of his death? We must accept the finding of the chairman of the commission upon this question as to the fact of their living in that relationship; the only question open for this court is whether they may lawfully be considered members of his family within the meaning of the statute. The word "family" is one of elastic and somewhat varied meaning. Its meaning in any particular statute is a question of intent and must be determined largely by the purpose of the act and the connection in which it is used; while, as used in wills and expressing relationship, it has a broader meaning. Jacobs v. Prescott, 102 Me. 63, 65 Atl. 761. A common definition of the word in acts granting benefits to members of a "family" is "a collective body of persons who live in one house under a head or manager who has a legal or moral duty to support the members thereof." Fox v. Waterloo Nat. Bank, 126 Iowa, 481, 102 N. W. 424; Sheehy v. Scott, 128 Iowa, 551, 553, 104 N. W. 1139, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 865; Holnback v. Wilson, 159 Ill. 148, 42 N. E. 169; Wike Bros. v. Garner, 179 Ill. 257, 259, 53 N. E. 613, 70 Am. St. Rep. 102; Cowden's Case, 225 Mass. 66, 67, 113 N. E. 1036; Robbins v. Railway Co., 100 Me. 496, 506, 62 Atl. 136, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 963. There appears to be no question from the statement of facts but that Harry Scott, Rachel S. Scott, and their children were living together in one household of which Harry Scott was the head and manager supporting them. But it is urged, and we think the point is well taken, that they must not be violating any law by so doing. Gordon v. Stewart, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 852, 96 N. W. 624. The violation of law in this case, however, only applies to Harry Scott and Rachel S. Scott, as was recognized in the case last cited; and it was held in Bell v. Keach, 80 Ky. 42, 45, Rutherford v. Motherhead, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 360, 92 S. W. 1021, Lane v. Phillips, 69 Tex. 240, 6 S. W. 610, 5 Am. St. Rep. 41, and Roberts v. Whaley, 192 Mich. 183, 158 N. W. 209, L. R. A. 1918A, 189, that there being a natural and moral duty on the part of the father to support his illegitimate children, even though at the time he was living in adultery with the mother, and had a wife living apart, the father and the illegitimate children constitute a household or family entitled to receive the benefits of a Homestead Act, and the illegitimate children were held to be dependents in case of the father's death under the Workmen's Compensation Act of Michigan (Acts Extra Sess. 1912, No. 10) in the cases above cited.

The common law was very harsh in its attitude toward the offspring of unlawful unions. Nearly, if not all, the states, however, have relaxed the rigor of the common-law rule, especially with reference to the rights of the illegitimate child in the property of his or her parents at their death, and, following the more liberal spirit of the civil and canon law, have enacted statutes permitting illegitimate children when the parents intermarry, or when they are publicly acknowledged by the father, to inherit equally from the father and mother and their collateral kindred. Section 8, c. 80, R. S. The natural and moral duty of the father to support and maintain them is generally recognized. Kent, Com. vol. 2, pp. 212-214; Schouler's Dom. Rel. § 279; chapter 102, R. S. Harry Scott was violating no law in fulfilling these natural and moral obligations of caring for and supporting his illegitimate children. The law condemns his acts so far as his relations with Rachel Somers were concerned; but, having brought these children into the world, it was his duty to care for them. They are not to blame for their conditions, nor their manner of coming into existence, and, having been recognized by him as his children, the law regards it as his duty to support them, and, having assumed that obligation and maintained them in his household, we think they became members of his family and dependents within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act of this state. Rev. St. c. 50, §§ 1-48.

The Michigan case above cited was decided upon this ground. The father in that case had a wife in an asylum for the insane, by whom he had one daughter who was living apart from him, and to whom he contributed nothing toward her support. He formed an illicit union with his housekeeper, by whom he had two children. The court held, there being no provision in the Michigan statute of conclusive dependency on the part of the wife as in the Maine statute, that the wife was not a dependent, she being supported by the state, that the daughter of the lawful wedlock was not a dependent, inasmuch as he was contributing nothing toward her support. The mistress had, of course, no standing in law and apparently made no claim, but it was held that inasmuch as he had cared for and supported the illegitimate children in his household, and it was his legal and moral duty to support them, that they had a right to expect a continuance of that support had he lived, and that they were therefore members of his family and dependents within the meaning of the Michigan statute.

The case of Bell v. Terry & Tench Co., 177 App. Div. 123, 163 N. Y. Supp. 733, cited by counsel for Mabel St. C. Scott, is not in point contra. The New York statute does not provide for the payment of the death benefits to the dependents and then define dependents as many statutes of this nature do, but stipulates that it shall be paid to the wife with additional compensation to children, if any, under 18 years of age. The court there held that the word "children," which the statute expressly provided included posthumous children and children legally adopted, by the familiar rule of construction above referred to, excluded all illegitimate children. We have already applied the same doctrine to the Maine statute, so far as it is applicable to this case.

[5, 6] It is true that the rights of these children of Harry Scott and Rachel S. Scott are purely statutory, and, unless they can be fairly said to come under its provisions, they cannot take. It is a well-recognized rule of construction of acts of this kind, however, and expressly enjoined upon those whose duty it is to administer this statute, that it shall be construed liberally with a view to carrying out its general purpose, and not strictly as other statutes in derogation of common-law rights usually are. Section 87, c. 50, R. S.; Simmon's Case, 117 Me. 175, 177, 103 Atl. 68. We so construe it. The general purpose of this act undoubtedly is to transfer the burdens resulting from industrial accidents, regardless of who may be at fault, from the individual to the industry and finally distribute it upon society as a whole, by compelling the industry, in which the accident occurs, through the employer, to contribute to the support of those who were actually and lawfully dependent upon the deceased for their sustenance during his lifetime. To transfer it in this case from the deceased upon whom these children were actually dependent in his lifetime and who had lawfully assumed the burden, to this mother, even though she had violated the social canons and the law of the land in producing these offspring, or upon the town in which they may have a pauper residence, is not in accord with the general purpose of this act.

Appeals dismissed with one bill of costs to appellee.

Decree of sitting justice affirmed.

(262 Pa. 4)

WALSKY v. H. C. FRICK COKE CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. July 17, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ¶278(10)—PERSONAL INJURIES—NEGLIGENCE—EQUIPMENT.

In action for injury to minor servant of a coal mining company when a train parted, evidence held not to show defendant's alleged negligence in not furnishing plaintiff with reasonably safe cars and appliances.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ¶278(20)—NEGLIGENCE—INSTRUCTION TO MINOR SERVANT—EVIDENCE.

In action for injury to minor servant of coal mining company when a train of cars parted, evidence held not to show defendant's alleged negligence in not giving proper instructions as to getting on and off of moving trains.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶172(2) — MASTER AND SERVANT ¶258(19)—MOTION TO STRIKE NONSUIT — NEW THEORY OF CASE — PLEADING.

Plaintiff could not successfully contend, in support of motion to strike nonsuit, that defendant was negligent in failing to instruct him to keep off of a runaway trip in a coal mine, where such negligence was not alleged in the statement, and such contention had not been previously made.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Fayette County.

Trespass by John Walsky, for himself as father, guardian, and next friend of Arthur Walsky, a minor, against the H. C. Frick Coke Company, to recover damages for personal injuries. From a judgment refusing to take off a compulsory nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The facts appear from the following opinion in the common pleas of Van Swearingen, P. J., sur plaintiffs' motion to take off nonsuit:

This action was for the recovery of damages for personal injuries sustained by a 17 year old boy in a coal mine of the defendant company. The trial resulted in the entry of a compulsory nonsuit. There is before the court now a motion to strike off the nonsuit, and also a motion for a new trial. The motion for a new trial at this stage of the case must be considered merely as going to the same point as the motion to strike off the nonsuit.

In the statement of claim it is alleged that at the time of the grievances complained of Arthur Walsky was employed as a trip rider in the mines of the defendant company at Davidson, and that in the course of his employment it became his duty to use certain cars, equipment, and appliances belonging to and in the possession and control of and furnished by the defendant. The material parts of the statement of claim were as follows:

"That it became and was the duty of the said plaintiff, Arthur Walsky, to set and to remove certain sprags in the wheels of said cars in said mine, and that after he had removed said sprags it became and was the duty of the said Arthur Walsky to take his position on one of the cars of said trip, and that after removing said sprags it became necessary and was the duty of him, the said Arthur Walsky, to board said cars or trip while same were in motion, whereby it then and there became and was the duty of the said defendant to use, and to furnish to the said Arthur Walsky to be used, safe, secure, and proper coal cars, appliances, and connections, and to see that the same and all parts thereof were in good, safe, working condition, and to use due and proper care in and about the premises. That it was also the duty of the said defendant company to give to the said plaintiff sufficient and proper instructions concerning his duties and concerning the nature of his employment. That it further became and was the duty of the said defendant company to see that the coal cars were not loaded beyond their proper capacity, and that said cars were properly loaded. Yet the said defendant company, not regarding its duties, did not use due and proper care in and about the premises, and did not furnish to the said Arthur Walsky to be used safe, secure, and suitable cars, equipment, and appliances, and did not give to the said Arthur Walsky sufficient and proper instructions concerning his duties under said employment, but, on the contrary, wholly neglected so to do, and negligently and carelessly furnished him, the said Arthur Walsky, with such unsafe, unsecure, and improper coal cars, connections, and appliances that the said trip, by reason of said insecure, unsafe, and improper connections, parted unknown to plaintiff, and that by reason thereof, and by reason of the failure of said defendant company to instruct the said Arthur Walsky as to his duties under said employment, and by reason of the failure of said company to see that said cars were loaded in a proper manner, on September 29, 1914, while attempting with due care to board said trip and assume his position on said car, he was thrown under the wheels of one of said cars," receiving the injuries of which complaint is made.

[1, 2] At the trial no evidence was offered in support of the plaintiff's allegation that it was his duty to sprag the wheels of the cars, or showing that he was in any way engaged in spragging the wheels at the time he was injured. Neither was there any evidence of any improper loading of the cars. The only allegations of negligence attempted to be supported at the trial were (1) that the defendant did not furnish the plaintiff with reasonably safe cars, connections and appliances, and (2) did not give to the plaintiff proper instructions relative to getting on and off moving trips; and in both of these respects the plaintiff failed in his proof. There was evidence that a trip of 13 cars parted between the seventh and eighth cars, and that the 7 cars ran away, downgrade; but there was no evidence of any defects in the connections between the cars. On the contrary, the testimony on behalf of the plaintiff was all to the effect that the hitchings, clevises, and pins connecting the cars together were all in good condition, and the cause of the disconnection of the cars remained entirely a matter of conjecture. When the seven cars started running away down the track, Walsky was on the rear of the front car. He set the brake on the rear of that car, and stepped off the trip, and attempted to get on again between the second and third cars, for the purpose of setting the brake on the rear of the second car, but fell, or was knocked down, and injured. At the time of the accident Walsky had been engaged in that particular work only a few days, and he had received no special instructions when he began as to his duties or the manner of avoiding dangers. The evidence showed that he had worked in that mine for a couple of years prior to the accident, and was accustomed to getting on and off of moving cars. There was evidence that it was safer to get on the rear end of a moving car than on the front end, even of cars connected together in a trip. The brakes were on the rear of the cars. And while the evidence relative to Walsky's attempt to get on the trip between the second and third cars was not as specific as it might have been, and all the evidence there was indicated that his attempt was to get on the rear of the second car, he alleged in his statement that he was ex-

the defendant. The defendant was not shown to have been negligent in any respect, and the compulsory nonsuit followed.

[3] At the argument to strike off nonsuit, counsel for the plaintiff contended that the negligence of the defendant was not in failing to give the plaintiff instructions as to how to get on and off of moving cars, but in failing to instruct him to keep off of moving cars, but in failing to instruct him to keep off of a runaway trip. In his brief, counsel for plaintiff says: "When the compulsory nonsuit was entered, great stress was laid by counsel for the defendant on the failure of the plaintiff to prove the manner in which the plaintiff was attempting to board the trip at the time he was injured. There is nothing in that contention. If the plaintiff was injured while trying to board a runaway trip, what difference does it make how he attempted to get on. The negligence of the company lies in the failure to instruct him to keep off." But that is not the negligence alleged in the plaintiff's statement of claim, and which the defendant was required to meet at the trial. It will be noticed that the plaintiff in his statement of claim alleged that "it became necessary and was the duty of him, the said Arthur Walsky, to board said cars or trip while same was in motion" and that the defendant "did not give to the said Arthur Walsky sufficient and proper instructions concerning his duties under said employment, but, on the contrary, wholly neglected so to do." The theory on which the case was tried was that the negligence of the defendant was in not giving the plaintiff proper instructions relative to getting on and off of moving trips, and that was the negligence alleged in plaintiff's statement of claim. At no time until the argument on the motion to strike off the nonsuit was the suggestion made of negligence on the part of the defendant in not instructing the defendant to keep off of runaway trips. To strike off the nonsuit and send the case to another trial on that ground would be to substitute another and different cause of action.

On the trial a compulsory nonsuit was entered, which the court subsequently refused to take off. Plaintiff appealed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCH-ZISKER, FRAZER, WALLING, and SIMPSON, JJ.

H. S. Dumbauld, of Uniontown, for appellant. W. J. Sturgis and S. J. Morrow, both of Uniontown, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. This judgment is affirmed, on the opinion of the court below, refusing to strike off the nonsuit and denying the motion for a new trial.

(262 Pa. 37)

VANDERSLOOT v. PENNSYLVANIA WATER & POWER CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. July 17, 1918.)

EQUITY §36—SUIT FOR REMOVAL OF DAM—LOCATION IN DIFFERENT COUNTIES.

Bill in equity to require removal of part of defendant's dam was properly dismissed, though prayers were so drafted as to ask a decree pertaining to construction of dam only in county of the venue, where such orders would necessarily affect the entire dam, the larger part of which was outside such county.

Bill in equity by John Edward Vandersloot against the Pennsylvania Water & Power Company for an injunction to require the removal of flashboards on part of defendant's dam west of the line dividing York and Lancaster counties, and for other relief. From a decree dismissing the bill, plaintiff appeals. Appeal dismissed.

See, also, 259 Pa. 99, 102 Atl. 422.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCH-ZISKER, FRAZER, WALLING, and SIMPSON, JJ.

Henry C. Niles, Michael S. Niles, Charles A. May, and George E. Neff, all of York, for appellant. W. F. Bay Stewart, of York, John E. Malone, of Lancaster, and Frederick B. Gerber, of York, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is dismissed, at the costs of the appellant, on the following from the opinion of the learned court below making absolute the rule to set aside the order of service and the service of the bill:

"A careful examination of the amended bill, and the prayers based thereon, leads to the conclusion that the present contention is controlled by the ruling of the Supreme Court. Vandersloot v. Pa. W. & P. Co., 259 Pa. 104, 102 Atl. 422. The prayers are so drafted that the court is asked to make such orders and decrees as would only pertain to the physical construction of the dam which exists in York county, yet it is quite obvious that any such order or decree would necessarily affect the entire dam of the defendant, the largest portion of which is outside the jurisdiction of the court."

(261 Pa. 540)

In re SEIDMAN'S ESTATE. Appeal of JOSEPH WILD & SON. Appeal of TROR-LICHT-DUNCKER CARPET CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 8, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR §275 — EXCEPTIONS IN LOWER COURT—RULINGS—FINDINGS.

Findings of an auditing judge can be reviewed only on assignments which show exceptions taken in, and acted upon by, the court below.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR §1017—FINDINGS OF AUDITING JUDGE—REVIEW.

Findings of auditing judge, excepted to in court below, will not be disturbed, unless a review shows palpable error.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR §853 — RULING IN LOWER COURT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Where the auditing judge, on exceptions to adjudication in an estate, refused to find that between an administrator's sale and the buyer's sale to a third party merchandise of considerable value had been disposed of by the first buyer, and where no exception was taken in court below, the ruling below would be treated as conclusive on appeal.

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §91 — TRUSTS §179—LIABILITY—FRAUD.

Ordinarily trustees, administrators, and like fiduciaries are not liable beyond what they actually receive, except in cases of fraud or gross negligence.

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS — 391 —
ADMINISTRATOR'S SALE—SURCHARGE.

Where administrator failed to exercise common care and caution in selling decedent's property, he was not liable to be surcharged for more than full value of property on day of sale, in absence of gross negligence or fraud.

6. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS — 366 — SALE BY ADMINISTRATOR—PRICE.

Where an admitted rise in the market might well explain the larger amount subsequently realized from merchandise sold by administrator, the latter price would not demonstrate the question of value at the time of the administrator's sale.

7. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS — 366 —
SALE BY ADMINISTRATOR — APPRAISAL VALUE.

The appraisal value is not conclusive in respect to the price obtained on an administrator's sale.

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Lackawanna County.

Exceptions by Joseph Wild & Son to adjudication in the estate of Moses L. Seidman, deceased. From a decree dismissing the exceptions exceptant and the Troilicht-Duncker Carpet Company, a creditor, appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, O. J., and STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

R. L. Levy, W. S. Diehl, O. A. Battenberg, A. V. Bower, Ralph Rymer, and Clarence Bahlentine, all of Scranton, for appellants. Morgan S. Kaufman and O'Brien & Kelly, all of Scranton, for appellee.

MOSCHZISKER, J. M. L. Seidman, who conducted a carpet and rug business in Scranton, died intestate January 3, 1916, and letters of administration were granted to his son, Wolf Seidman. Duly appointed appraisers valued the stock in decedent's store at $9,895. On January 24, 1916, after the due posting of printed bills, the administrator sold these assets in bulk, at public venue, to his brother-in-law, Anthony Shiff, for $3,600 cash. The latter entered into a partnership with B. J. Smith, a son-in-law of the administrator, and in March, 1916, this firm disposed of the commodities in question to the Scranton Dry Goods Company for $10,645.27.

The administrator's first and final account was filed March 12, 1917, and, among other creditors, Joseph Wild & Son excepted to the allowance of $6,295, claimed therein as the difference between the appraised value of decedent's merchandise and the actual amount realized therefrom by accountant. The exceptant contended that these goods were worth at least $20,000; but, after taking evidence pro and con, the court below found as a fact that, upon the date of the public sale thereof, January 24, 1916, their value was $8,000. The court further found that "Wolf Seidman, in the administration of the estate of the decedent, did not exercise common skill, * * * prudence, and * * * caution." Upon these findings, accountant was surcharged $4,400, the difference between the real value found by the auditing judge and the price realized at the administrator's sale, whereupon exceptant appealed to this court.

Appellant contends (1) that accountant should have been found guilty of fraudulent conduct in connection with the disposal of decedent's merchandise, and charged with the full amount received therefrom up to the time of the purchase by the Scranton Dry Goods Company; (2) that, prior to the last-mentioned purchase, Shiff & Smith had sold goods of considerable value from this stock of merchandise; (3) that, even though accountant's conduct were not fraudulent, at the least he should be charged with the price decedent's goods would have realized, had common skill, prudence, and caution been exercised in the disposal thereof—i. e., the figure which they afterwards brought when sold to the Scranton Dry Goods Company by Shiff & Smith, in March, 1916; (4) that, in any event, the auditing judge put too low a value upon the commodities in question; (5) finally, it is suggested that under no circumstances ought such value to have been placed at less than the amount of the appraisal. We shall dispose of these questions in the order stated.

[1, 2] While the record before us shows circumstances connected with the administration of decedent's estate which lay Wolf Seidman open to grave suspicion, and the evidence relied upon by appellant tends to prove other facts, unnecessary now to mention, which, if we were exercising original jurisdiction, might lead us to affirm certain of the latter's contentions, yet, notwithstanding these sinister appearances, the auditing judge, who saw and heard the witnesses, not only refused to convict the administrator of fraudulent conduct, but found expressly to the contrary, and these findings were not excepted to in the court below. The auditing judge also made a series of subordinate findings dealing with details of the transactions now in controversy, against the contentions of appellant, which also were not excepted to. In other words, despite requests therefor, this record contains no finding that the administrator either conspired with or was improperly interested in the firm of Shiff & Smith, or that he was guilty of any fraud, in connection with the original formation or subsequent conduct of that firm, relating to the sales of the merchandise here in controversy; and, as indicated above, neither the refusal of these requests nor the findings to the contrary appear to have been excepted to below. The present case, like all others, is subject to the well-established rule that findings can be reviewed only on assignments which show exceptions taken in, and acted upon by, the court below; and even then such findings will not be disturbed, unless the review demonstrates palpable error. So far as appellant's charges of fraud are concerned, the assignments at bar fall when tested by these rules.

[3] 2. Although requested so to do, the auditing judge refused to find that, between the purchase by Shift & Smith and their sale to the Scranton Dry Goods Company, merchandise of considerable value, naming the amount thereof, had been disposed of by the former. No exception having been taken in the court below, we must treat this as conclusive upon that point.

[4, 5] 3. As to the penalty for lack of due care and discretion, it appears there was a rise in the carpet and rug market between the date of the administrator's sale of decedent's merchandise and the subsequent sale of these goods by the purchasers thereof. Albeit there is force in appellant's contention that, in the exercise of common skill, prudence, and caution, the administrator ought to have held the goods, so as to take advantage of this rise, yet we cannot say reversible error was committed when the court below failed to make a surcharge upon that theory. The auditing judge notes, as a reason for the early sale, that it relieved decedent's estate from the obligation to pay rent, it being made "part of the terms of the sale * * * that the purchasers would have to pay the rent"; and we find no request upon the record that accountant be found guilty of negligence or surcharged because he sold the goods at too early a date. Ordinarily, trustees, administrators, and like fiduciaries are not liable beyond what they actually receive, except in cases of fraud or gross carelessness (Calhoun's Estate, 6 Watts, 185; Fahnestock's Appeal, 104 Pa. 46; Semple's Estate, 189 Pa. 385, 390, 42 Atl. 28; Skeer's Estate, 236 Pa. 404, 410, 84 Atl. 787, 42 L. R. A. [N. S.] 170), and here the findings negative such misconduct; but, on the peculiar facts at bar, because accountant failed to exercise common care, prudence, and caution in disposing of decedent's property, the court below surcharges him with what it finds to be the full value thereof on the day of the administrator's sale. In the absence of a finding of gross negligence in selling when accountant did, or of fraudulent participation by him in the subsequent sale of the property in question, appellant cannot properly complain of the amount of the surcharge.

[6] 4. On the subject of valuation, after reading the testimony, we are unable to agree with appellant's contention that there is no evidence to justify the value found by the auditing judge. Furthermore, the admitted rise in the market may well explain the larger amount subsequently realized from the same merchandise, and hence this later price by no means either demonstrates or sheds controlling light upon the question of value at the time of the administrator's sale.

[7] 5. Finally, the appraisal value is not conclusive (Reese's Appeal, 116 Pa. 272, 274, 9 Atl. 315; Semple's Estate, 189 Pa. 385, 393, 42 Atl. 28); therefore, on the findings and evidence in this case, we cannot say the court below should have adopted it, rather than the figures which the auditing judge determined upon as the amount, or price, which should have been secured by the exercise of proper diligence on the part of the administrator.

An appeal has been filed by the Troilicht-Duncker Carpet Company, another creditor; but there is a stipulation of record that the judgment here entered shall apply to this other case, and it is accordingly so ordered.

We find no reversible error presented by the assignments. They are all overruled, and the decree of the court below is affirmed, at the cost of appellant.

(302 Pa. 1)

GURSKI v. SUSQUEHANNA COAL CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. June 11, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT § 875(2)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—ACCIDENT—"COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT."

Where a miner, going to get tools in a part of the mine where he was told not to go, died from noxious gases, he died as the result of an accident occurring "in the course of his employment," within Workmen's Compensation Act, § 801.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Course of Employment.]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT § 416—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—FINDINGS OF REFEREE.

Where a question arises as to whether an accident from which a workman dies occurred in the course of his employment, the findings of fact by the compensation referee should be so explicit as to state the full circumstances thereof.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT § 417(9)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—FINDINGS OF COMPENSATION BOARD.

Where the Workmen's Compensation Board finds facts additional to those stated by the referee, and their correctness is conceded, the Supreme Court may determine the issues upon the facts so found.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Luzerne County.

Proceeding under Workmen's Compensation Act by Julia Gurski against the Susquehanna Coal Company. Finding of referee for claimant reversed by Workmen's Compensation Board, but affirmed upon appeal to common pleas court, and the employer appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCH-ZISKER, FRAZER, WALLING, and SIMPSON, JJ.

H. A. Gordon, and A. L. Williams, both of Wilkes-Barre, for appellant. Rush Trescott and Roger J. Dever, both of Wilkes-Barre, for appellee.

MOSCHZISKER, J. This is a case under the act of June 2, 1915 (P. L. 736). Plaintiff widow of Frank Gurski, claimed compensation for the death of her husband; the referee found in her favor; the Workmen's Compensation Board reversed; an appeal was taken to the common pleas of Luzerne county, which tribunal reversed the board and affirmed the referee; the defendant employer has appealed to this court.

On October 19, 1916, Frank Gurski, a contract miner in the employ of defendant company died from inhaling noxious gases, which had accumulated in a portion of the latter's mine. The part of the mine infected by these gases was closed off, marked "danger," and all workmen, including plaintiff's husband, were notified not to enter therein. Gurski, who worked in the gaseous section of the mine prior to the time it was closed off, had left "his mining machine, and possibly some other tools, there." About two months subsequent, when engaged in another part of the mine, "at a point 2,600 feet from his former place" of employment, "in the course of his work, he had occasion to use a mining machine, * * * and * * * expressed himself to his fellow workmen that he would go in for his tools to the former working place." On the morning of the accident, Gurski had been notified not to go into the fenced-off portion of the mine; but, "notwithstanding these positive directions and the danger marks on the door and fences, he and his helper went to the place where he had been working [previously], with the declared intention of getting his machine and other tools"; and he died as the result of so doing.

We have taken the above matter from the opinion of Commissioner Scott, of the Compensation Board, as did the court below; and, on the facts stated, it appears that plaintiff's husband met his death by reason of the harmful condition of his employer's premises, while on his way to fetch tools with which to work—in other words, while he was upon the premises of his employer and acting in furtherance of the latter's business.

[1] We agree with the learned court below that Gurski died from an accident which occurred in the course of his employment, within the meaning of the act of 1915, supra, and that, "though the orders, not to go into the blocked-off portion of the mine, may have been fully understood and appreciated by him [his departure therefrom] would be but a negligent act on his part"—which does not bar the present claim for compensation. Section 301, Act of 1915, supra (page 738);

Lane v. Horn & Hardart Baking Co., 261 Pa. 329, 104 Atl. 615.

[2, 3] In cases of this character, the referee should make his findings of fact so comprehensive and explicit as to disclose the full story of the accident. Here the referee's findings are too meager, and, since no hearing de novo was held by the Compensation Board, that body, strictly speaking, should not have found facts in addition to those stated by its subordinate officer, the referee (McCauley v. Imperial Woolen Co., 261 Pa. 312, 104 Atl. 617); but this point was not urged in the court below and is not raised here. Moreover, it appears that all parties concede "the correctness of the statement of facts contained in the opinion of Commissioner Scott," and that "the facts of the case are not in dispute"; therefore we finally determine the issues involved upon such conceded facts.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

(262 Pa. 39)

WORST v. DE HAVEN et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. July 17, 1918.)

1. WILLS ¶461 — CONSTRUCTION — "OR" — "AND."

In the construction of wills, the court may read, "or" as if it were "and," and "and" as if it were "or," whenever it is absolutely necessary to carry out testator's expressed intent.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, And; Or.]

2. WILLS ¶865(1) — CONSTRUCTION — INTENT.

A will giving an estate for life and over to four children, to share the rents and profits "during the lifetime of them or the survivors or survivor of them," and over to testator's grandchildren, their heirs, etc., carried the whole estate, so that there was no intestacy.

3. CONTRACTS ¶147(1) — EXPRESSED INTENT — IMPLIED INTENT.

In construing any writing, the expression of an intent, as to the particular thing under consideration, negatives the idea of an implied intent in regard thereto; the maxim "Expressum facit cessare tacitum" applying.

4. WILLS ¶547 — CONSTRUCTION — TRANSPOSITION.

A will which, after giving a life estate to testator's wife, gave his realty to his four named children, to have the rents, etc., share and share alike "during the lifetime of them or the survivors or survivor of them," and over to grandchildren, and their heirs, etc., would be construed by transferring the quoted words to a place immediately after the names of such devisees, so as to make the survivorship apply to the rents for life.

5. WILLS ¶460 — CONSTRUCTION — TRANSPOSITION OF WORDS OR SENTENCES.

In wills obscurely expressed the court may transpose a word or sentence to effectuate the testamentary purpose; the order in which the words are placed being immaterial, if a different arrangement will best answer the testator's apparent intent.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Lancaster County.

Assumpsit by Le Roy Worst against Catharine E. De Haven and others to recover rents collected by defendants. From a judgment for defendants on an affidavit of defense in the nature of a demurrer, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCH-ZISKER, FRAZER, WALLING, and SIMPSON, JJ.

John E. Malone, of Lancaster, for appellant. Frank S. Groff and William H. Keller, both of Lancaster, for appellees.

SIMPSON, J. By the will of Henry Worst, he gave all his residuary estate to his wife for life, and as to his real estate further provided as follows:

"Fifth. Upon the death of my said wife, I give and devise my real estate to my four children, to wit, Catharine E. De Haven, née Worst, S. Clayton Worst, Annie M. Worst and Harry L. Worst, to have and to hold the same and take and divide, share and share alike, the rents, issues and profits thereof during the lifetime of them or the survivors or survivor of them. And at the death of the survivors or survivor of them, I give and devise the same to my grandchildren, per stirpes, their heirs and assigns."

S. Clayton Worst, one of the sons, died February 20, 1910, leaving the plaintiff as his sole heir at law. Testator's widow died July 15, 1913. After her death the three surviving children collected and kept the rents of the real estate. This suit was brought by plaintiff against them to recover one-fourth of said rents, asserting his right thereto under the foregoing fifth paragraph of his grandfather's will. The defendants denied his right, raised that question as one of law under section 20 of the act of 14th of May, 1915 (P. L. 486), the court below decided in their favor and entered judgment accordingly, and this appeal was then taken.

[1] Plaintiff's claim is that as the gift is to the four children during their lifetime and the lifetime of the survivors and survivor of them, and as he is the sole heir of one of those children, that the gift of the income during such survivorship must inure to him. But the will does not so provide. The words are, "or the survivors or survivor of them," and not, "and the survivors or survivor of them." It is true that we may read "or" as if it were "and," and "and" as if it were "or," whenever it is absolutely necessary to carry out the expressed intent of the testator; but we are not at liberty so to do unless it is necessary. Griffith v. Woodward, 1 Yeates, 316; Gilmor's Estate, 154 Pa. 523, 28 Atl. 614, 35 Am. St. Rep. 855. In the present instance it is not.

If said paragraph of the will were to be literally construed according to the existing arrangement thereof, it would result in a manifest absurdity; for it would give to the three children first dying a share of the rents after they were dead. We must therefore seek for a construction which will avoid that absurdity. Three possibilities exist:

[2, 3] 1. To decide that an intestacy arose as to the share of the rents which S. Clayton Worst would have received had he lived. We agree, however, with both parties to this litigation, that an intestacy does not result, for where, as here, the words of the will carry the whole estate, an intestacy will be held not to exist. Reimer's Estate, 159 Pa. 212, 28 Atl. 186; Woodside's Estate, 188 Pa. 45, 41 Atl. 475.

2. To decide that there was an implied gift to the heir of testator. This is plaintiff's claim. But manifestly testator did not intend to leave anything to implication; and to permit it here would result in an express antagonism to the last clause of the same paragraph of the will, which provides that the grandchildren's interest shall commence after the death of all testator's children. In construing any writing, the expression of an intent, as to the particular thing under consideration, negatives the idea of an implied intent in regard thereto. This is stated in the maxim "expressum facit cessare tacitum," which, as Broom points out (Broom's Legal Maxims, *651), "excludes any increase of an estate by implication, where there is an estate expressly limited by will."

[4] 3. This leaves open only the conclusion that the survivorship mentioned in the will applies to the gift of the rents for life. It is true that the words used might be better phrased to express the purpose, but a lack of clarity of expression will no more defeat a testator's intent than it does that of any other person. At most this will requires a rearranging of the language actually used, so as to transfer the words "during the lifetime of them or the survivors or survivor of them," to a place immediately after the words "Harry L. Worst," making the paragraph then read:

"At the death of my said wife, I give and devise my real estate to my four children, to wit, Catharine E. De Haven, née Worst, S. Clayton Worst, Annie M. Worst and Harry L. Worst, during the lifetime of them or the survivors or survivor of them, to have and to hold the same and take and divide, share and share alike, the rents, issues and profits thereof. And at the death of the survivors or survivor of them, I give and devise the same to my grandchildren, per stirpes, their heirs and assigns."

[5] From at least as early as Roberjot v. Mazurie, 14 Serg. & R. 42, to at least as late as Eckert v. Penna. Trust Co., 212 Pa. 372, 61 Atl. 935, we have held that in wills obscurely expressed the court may transpose a word or a sentence in order to effectuate the testamentary purpose; the order in which the words are placed being immaterial, if a different arrangement will best answer the apparent intent of the testator. Ferry's Appeal, 102 Pa. 207. We think this is a case in which that course may be safely followed.

The assignment of error is overruled, and the judgment affirmed.

(262 Pa. 28)

CITY BANK OF YORK v. RIEKER.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. July 17, 1918.)

1. PLEDGES §17 — COLLATERAL SECURITY—RECORD.

A creditor, accepting as collateral security the assignment of a judgment note or mortgage of a third party, should enter it of record within a reasonable time, if thereby it will become a lien upon realty, and revive it, from time to time, if necessary, even without any agreement thereon.

2. PLEDGES §30(8) — COLLATERAL SECURITY—PROTEST.

If a creditor takes as collateral a note not due, he should protest it so as to hold the solvent indorsers, if any.

3. PLEDGES §30(2) — COLLATERAL SECURITY—COLLECTION.

A creditor accepting an unmatured claim as collateral should attempt its collection within a reasonable time after maturity.

4. PLEDGES §28 — COLLATERAL SECURITY—PROTECTION.

A creditor accepting collateral security, and who is negligent in respect to its protection, whereby a loss is suffered, must bear such loss.

5. PLEDGES §29 — MORTGAGE COLLATERAL—CONVERSION INTO OTHER SECURITY—NEGLIGENCE.

A creditor taking an assignment of an overdue mortgage lien as collateral which could not be disturbed, and which needed no reviving, was not negligent in refusing the debtor's request to convert it into some other kind of security, especially if that would entail considerable expense or a personal liability for taxes, etc.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, York County.

Assumpsit on a note by the City Bank of York against Amos E. Rieker. Verdict for defendant and judgment thereon, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and judgment entered for plaintiff.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCHIZISKE, FRAZER, WALLING, and SIMPSON, JJ.

Henry C. Niles and Donald H. Yost, both of York, for appellant. James G. Glessner and Samuel B. Meisenhelder, both of York, for appellee.

SIMPSON, J. Plaintiff sued upon two promissory notes for $5,000 and $4,500, respectively, given by the defendant to it. As collateral thereto plaintiff held certain stocks, and in addition two mortgages aggregating $17,000 secured upon a property in the borough and county of Queens, N. Y. The mortgages were about four years overdue when assigned, and the property covered thereby was subject to two other mortgages, upon which $20,750 was due, exclusive of interest, and to sewer and tax assessments aggregating nearly as much more, all of which were prior liens to the two collateral mortgages. Pending the trial the stocks were sold at a price satisfactory to defendant, leaving an admitted balance of $6,763.91, with interest from February 6, 1918. The counterclaim as to this balance was that the defendant had given plaintiff's cashier notice to foreclose said collateral mortgages, and had been told it was all right, but that no foreclosure had taken place; that at that time the real estate was of a value greater than all the claims against it, including the two collateral mortgages, but that, owing to the declaration of war with Germany, it had depreciated in value more than the balance of plaintiff's claim, and defendant therefore asked that the verdict should be in his favor with a certificate against the plaintiff in the sum of $6,500. There was evidence that the bonds accompanying the mortgages had become valueless by the discharge of the obligor in bankruptcy, but no request was made that plaintiff should sell the mortgages themselves, no tender of money to cover the expenses of foreclosure and the prior liens on the property, and no allegation that the collateral mortgages had been discharged as liens upon the property by proceedings upon the prior incumbrances or otherwise. Plaintiff denied both the fact and legal effect of the above allegations of defendant, and requested binding instructions in its favor, which were refused, and the case was submitted to the jury, a verdict being rendered for the defendant without any certificate in his favor. A motion for judgment non obstante veredicto was made and dismissed, judgment entered on the verdict, and this appeal taken. The single point we have to decide is: On the evidence submitted at the trial, ought binding instructions to have been given for plaintiff?

Some very interesting questions are suggested by this record—questions regarding which this court has not always been wholly in accord with the courts of our sister states, or even with itself; but, as the issue here may be determined without reference to those questions, we prefer not to answer them until it is necessary so to do, after careful arguments thereof due to such necessity.

[1-4] We have held, and in so doing have gone as far as any court of which we have knowledge, that, in the absence of an agreement upon the subject, if a creditor accepts as collateral security an assignment of a judgment note or mortgage of a third party, he should enter it of record within a reasonable time, if thereby it will become a lien upon real estate, and under like circumstances should revive it from time to time, if necessary; that if a promissory note not yet matured is thus accepted he should protest it so as to hold solvent indorsers, if any; that if an unmatured claim is so assigned he should attempt its collection within a reasonable time after maturity; and that if he is supinely negligent in any of those matters, whereby loss is suffered, he and not his debtor must bear that loss. The reason for thus over the thing assigned, whereby the debtor is prevented from protecting his property by such action as may be needed, the creditor should not be supinely negligent concerning the thing which it is his duty to reassign to the debtor when he pays his debt.

[8] But those requirements must not be stretched beyond their reason and spirit; and hence where, as here, the thing assigned has a lien which cannot be disturbed and needs no reviving, and is overdue when it was assigned, the creditor is not bound, with or without notice, and it is not negligence for him to refuse to convert into some other kind of security that which both parties agreed he should hold as collateral; especially if considerable expense may be required to convert it and to hold the new security, and he may become personally liable for accruing taxes on the property if he obtains title thereto. It is not to be overlooked that there is neither an express nor implied agreement that plaintiff should accept any other kind of security than that for which it bargained. Nor is there any agreement, express or implied, that it should accept the opinion or the fears of defendant regarding the security bargained for, or as an alternative abandon the collateral to the defendant; and this is especially true where, as here, the foreclosure would have been in the face of a falling market, due to a cause which time will cure. It is within the experience of the writer that, in the panic caused by cornering the stock of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, such a rule as was applied by the court below would have caused great loss to money lenders, and would have bankrupted some of the oldest and most conservative mercantile establishments in the land, without benefiting either party to the contract of lending.

Be it so that plaintiff herein was bound to act in good faith and without supine negligence, it is none the less true that a refusal to act according to defendant's judgment or fears is not negligence of any kind. If bound to act whenever defendant required it, its bargain for a particular security might, without its consent, be broken as soon as made; its judgment would go for naught, and it might lose some or all of its claim, but could never receive more than its debt. Such a contention is too one-sided to receive judicial sanction unless unavoidable. To allow one of the parties to the contract to thus change it without the consent of the other, either express or implied, would come perilously near violating the obligation of the contract, if it did not overstep the constitutional line of inhibition.

If, upon the facts appearing in this record, the defendant desired the collateral mortgages to be foreclosed, it was his right to of the mortgages, or of satisfactory arrangements his desires could be no other right.

The conclusion that necessity for consideration raised.

The judgment is reversed for the plaintiff interest from February to be entered also on below and all future interest in said court.

FULTON FARMERS' ASSOCIATION v. BEECHER

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, 1915)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—COURT BELOW—EXCEPT

The lower court's decision of claim was sufficient, signed as error, will not be reversed.

2. PLEADING—§ 155—SUFFICIENCY—STATUTE

Under Act May 14, 1915 (P. L. 484) § 1, an affidavit of defense, averments of the state defendant.

3. PLEADING—§ 155—SUFFICIENCY—STATUTE

In assumpsit by a treasurer for a balance due, an affidavit of defense to be filed May 14, 1915 (P. L. 484) § 1, defendant collected anything in statement, or averment, and make denial so as to entitle plaintiff to judgment, which there was no reason to issue on a following.

4. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—REFUSAL TO PAY OVER TO COMMISSIONS.

The agent of an association to pay over funds collected to commission thereon.

5. PLEADING—§ 855(1)—PLEADINGS—RELIEF

Under Act May 14, 1915, plaintiff, upon a rule for a sufficient affidavit of defense entered for part of the proceeds for balance.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR—JUDGMENT—ASSIGNMENT—VIEW.

Supreme Court need not court's action in giving judgment to trial on part of judgment entered for affidavit of defense, unless assigned as error.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Lancaster County.

Assumpsit for commission Farmers' Association against Beecher. Judgment for plaintiff, resending the amount, which the affidavit of defense, with leave to pl trial for the balance of its claim, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCHIZISKER, FRAZER, WALLING, and SIMPSON, JJ.

John E. Malone and Harnish & Harnish, all of Lancaster, for appellant. H. Frank Eshleman and B. F. Davis, both of Lancaster, for appellee.

SIMPSON, J. The statement of claim in this case, was supplemented by a bill of particulars requested by defendant. As thus supplemented, the statement was held to be sufficient by the court below, and no exception was taken to that ruling, and no error is here assigned in regard thereto.

Thereby plaintiff averred that defendant had been appointed treasurer of plaintiff during its organization as a corporation, which appointment was approved by the board of directors after incorporation; that as his compensation he was to receive 2 per centum of the moneys collected by him; that he kept a cashbook, a copy of which was attached, in which he entered some of the funds collected by him; that plaintiff claimed to recover the balance appearing thereby, certain other items specifically stated, but not appearing therein, and certain additional items, which it alleged defendant had expressly admitted to plaintiff's board of directors or officers was owing by him; and it denied in general terms the propriety of certain of the credits appearing in said cashbook. The items in the cashbook were upwards of 1,300 in number and varied in amount from 11 cents to $1,459.91.

The affidavit of defense specifically denied that the defendant had made any admissions to plaintiff's board of directors or officers, and as to the other averments simply said:

"The statement of facts as set forth in paragraph — of statement is denied."

Plaintiff thereupon took a rule for judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense, specifying the details in which the affidavit was alleged to be insufficient. The court below allowed defendant the credits appearing in the cashbook, refused judgment as to the sums which it was alleged he had admitted to plaintiff's board of directors or officers, but entered judgment as to the other items, with leave to plaintiff to proceed to trial for the residue. From that judgment this appeal is taken, the only specification of error being the entry of said judgment.

[1] Defendant now avers that the statement of claim is insufficient, because not a concise statement, as required by the act of assembly. He fails to draw the distinction between conciseness and brevity. In the nature of the case this statement could not be brief, but we need not consider that question further, as it was not raised by the affidavit of defense in the court below, and no exception was taken to the ruling that the statement was sufficient.

[2, 3] Nor is defendant any happier in his contention that his bald denial of the averments of the several paragraphs of the statement of claim was sufficient. We agree with the court below that those averments are wholly insufficient, because of section 8 of the act of May 14, 1915 (P. L. 483), which provides that—

"It shall not be sufficient for a defendant in his affidavit of defense to deny generally the allegations of the statement of claim."

To make his denial effective, a defendant must deny that he collected anything from the party named in the statement, or aver how much he did collect from that party, and he must make that denial so clear and specific that plaintiff may forthwith obtain judgment for the amount as to which there is no real defense, and at the ensuing trial the court may know exactly what the issue is. That is the purpose of the above-quoted provision from the act of 1915, and that purpose will be enforced.

[4] Nor do we agree that defendant should have been allowed the 2 per cent. commissions on the moneys regarding which judgment is entered. He forgets that commissions are payable for faithful service only, and that this judgment conclusively determines that he has not been faithful in paying over this fund. Moreover, he does not claim any commissions in his affidavit of defense, or set up any counterclaim in regard thereto.

[5, 6] Lastly, defendant says that, as the rule was for judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense, the court below was without jurisdiction to enter judgment for part of the claim with leave to proceed for the residue, and as to this he cites Faux v. Fittler, 223 Pa. 568, 72 Atl. 891, 132 Am. St. Rep. 742. We might dismiss this contention, because of the fact that the only assignment of error does not really raise this question, in that it does not specify error in giving plaintiff leave to proceed to trial for the balance of its claim; but, because the question suggested is an important one, we prefer to settle it now.

In Faux v. Fittler, supra, we did hold that a rule for judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense was a rule for judgment for the whole claim, and upon it the court was without authority to enter judgment as upon a rule for judgment for a specified and designated portion of the claim. That decision was rendered in 1909, when the act of May 25, 1887 (P. L. 271), provided for the former rule, and the act of July 15, 1897 (P. L. 276), provided for the latter. Since then both those acts have been superseded by the act of May 14, 1915 (P. L. 486, § 17), which provides that—

"The plaintiff may take a rule for judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense to the whole or any part of his claim, and the court shall enter judgment or discharge the rule, as justice may require."

This act, which was intended to simplify proceedings, and to reach the real issue as speedily as possible, is to be liberally construed; especially where, as in this case, the particulars in which the affidavit is alleged to be erroneous, were specifically set forth on the record in connection with the rule. It often happens that counsel think that the whole affidavit is insufficient, and the court agrees thereto in part only. No reason appears why, under such circumstances, two rules should be required. The purpose of the act of 1915, as above specified, is opposed to such a construction, and hence, as the conclusion reached by the court below is such as "justice" does require:

The judgment is affirmed.

(363 Pa. 50)

PRICE v. WHELAN et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. July 17, 1918.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇐317(1)—EFFECT OF CONDEMNATION—EXTINGUISHMENT OF EASEMENT.

Where a vendor stipulated to secure the vacation of a street or road located at one end of the property, and took steps to do so, pending which a railroad condemned the road and compensated the purchaser therefor, such condemnation extinguished the easement.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇐204—EXTINGUISHMENT OF EASEMENT—ACTION FOR PURCHASE PRICE.

Where vendor contracted to have vacated a street or road upon the property, pending which the price of the land included therein was deposited by purchaser with a stakeholder, upon the extinguishment of the easement for the road from any cause, such as its condemnation by railroad, with compensation to purchaser, vendor might recover the money so deposited.

3. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇐320—CONDEMNATION BY RAILROAD—TITLE—COMPENSATION.

Where a railroad authorized to condemn land filed its bond in a proceeding, the title passed to it, subject to the owner's right of compensation.

4. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇐318—PUBLIC USE—NEW USE.

Where land held for one public use is lawfully taken for another inconsistent public use, the former use is destroyed.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Assumpsit by Edward Trotter Price, surviving trustee under the will of Thomas O. Price, deceased, against Patrick J. Whelan and another, for the balance of the purchase price of land. Finding by the court, trying the case without a jury, in favor of the plaintiff for $3,118, judgment thereon, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, O. J., and MOSCH-ZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

J. Lee Patton, of Philadelphia, for appellants. Wm. Findlay Brown, of Philadelphia, for appellee.

WALLING, J. This is an action of assumpsit for the balance of purchase money of land. In August, 1912, plaintiff sold defendants about 30 acres of land, located in the northeastern part of the city of Philadelphia; the western boundary of one piece thereof being the eastern line of the right of way of the Northern Pennsylvania Railroad Company. Within the bounds of the land, and adjoining the right of way, was a public road of the width of 32 feet, extending from Fisher avenue south for about 865 feet. By the agreement plaintiff was to secure the vacation of this street, pending which, the price of the land embraced therein, to wit, $3,180, was deposited with a bank as stakeholder, and later paid into court, where this suit to determine its ownership was tried without a jury.

In 1854, a public highway known as the Bristol road, of the width of 33 feet, extended along the western boundary of what is the road here in question. At that time the land lying east of the center of the Bristol road, including that here in controversy, was owned by Joseph Price and his wife Elizabeth G. Price, plaintiff's predecessors in title. Then the railroad company took and occupied the Bristol road as right of way, and secured a conveyance from Mr. and Mrs. Price of their one-half part thereof for railroad purposes. To comply with the statute, it was necessary for the railroad company to reconstruct the public highway, so it was provided in said conveyance:

"That they, the said Joseph Price and wife, their heirs and assigns, shall and will throw out and leave open for public use as a road or common highway, in lieu of that part of said Bristol road or street occupied by the railroad as above stated, a strip of ground of the width of 32 feet, adjoining and along the eastern side or line of the said Bristol road or street, so far as it is laid down of the width aforesaid: * * * Provided that the said strip of ground so thrown out shall not at any time hereafter be used for railroad purposes without the grant or permission of the said Joseph Price and wife or of her heirs or assigns."

Then follows a stipulation for reversion of the land so thrown open and restoration of the Bristol road, should it cease to be used for railroad purposes. So far as appears the 32-foot strip of land so thrown open has since been used by the public. Following the conveyance to defendants, plaintiff took steps to secure its vacation, and, after some negotiations caused a petition on part of defendants for that purpose to be presented to the city authorities, to which an answer was filed. In March, 1914, while that proceeding was pending, the railroad company filed in court its petition and bond for the condemnation of a block of defendants' land embracing the 32-foot strip here in question; the record shows that the land so taken was for any and all uses and purposes of the railroad company. The viewers appointed in the latter proceeding awarded defendants $9,532, as damages for such taking, from which both parties appealed and later compromised. The condemnation proceedings show said 82 feet as a public road. On the theory that it was extinguished by the taking for railroad purposes, plaintiff brought this suit. The trial court sustained that theory, made its findings, and entered judgment for plaintiff accordingly, from which defendant appealed. We find no error in the record.

[1-4] The railroad company was within its rights, and when the bond was filed the title passed as to all land embraced in the proceedings, including the bed of the public road, with the right to use the same for all railroad purposes. As between the parties the railroad acquired the street itself, and defendants the right to be compensated for it; especially as by the original agreement it was never to be used for railway purposes without the consent of the owner of the fee. By the taking the right to compensation vested in the defendants. Underwood v. Penna., Monongahela & Southern R. R. Co., 255 Pa. 553, 99 Atl. 64. It is not what the railroad company has done with the property taken, but what it has the right to do with it; it may as against defendants cover the entire roadbed with tracks. That the public may require a reconstruction of the highway elsewhere is true, as it also is that a railroad cannot occupy a street without municipal consent, and perhaps not now, except by the consent of the Public Service Commission; but those questions are not material here, as we are dealing with private rights. A railroad company, having taken property under the right of eminent domain, cannot set up the lack of municipal consent to occupy it. Such company, by proper consent, may lay its track in a street and use the same conjointly with the public; but here the entire street and adjoining land were appropriated, with the right to use it all for railroad purposes, which whenever exercised will exclude the public therefrom. Where land held for one public use is lawfully taken for and other inconsistent public use, the former is destroyed. Regardless of what is done with the land, defendants will have no right to additional compensation; as to them the land, including the easement, is gone. Their entire interest was divested, and for it they were or should have been compensated. A formal vacation of the street now would as to them be a vain thing. The public street having been destroyed by the condemnation proceedings, at least so far as the parties to this suit are concerned, plaintiff is entitled to the fund in question, for the extinguishment of the easement, no matter by whom or from what cause, inures to his benefit. On the basis of such extinguishment, his contract was fulfilled, and he is entitled to the balance of the purchase money irrespective of what defendants receive from the railroad company. Had that company taken the public road without making compensation to defendants, they could have maintained ejectment for the land embraced therein. Phillips v. Dunkirk, etc., R. R. Co., 78 Pa. 177.

Neither plaintiff nor his predecessors in title received any compensation for the use of the 82-foot strip of land for railroad purposes, and taking it for that purpose was such a violation of the original agreement as to destroy the easement therein, as between the parties. Plaintiff's rights cannot be prejudiced by the recitals in the deed from defendants to the railroad company, made subsequent to the bringing of this suit.

As the case turns practically on the question whether the condemnation removed the easement of the public road, we do not consider it necessary to pass separately on the several assignments of error.

The judgment is affirmed.

(117 Me. 423)

TIBBETTS v. DR. D. P. ORDWAY PLASTER CO.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Nov. 9, 1918.)

1. PLEADING — 225(2) — AMENDMENT — POWERS OF SINGLE JUSTICE.

Under Rev. St. c. 87, § 36, the presiding justice, when no exceptions are taken, has the same power as the law court alone formerly had to pass on demurrer and on the question whether plaintiff should be permitted to amend.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR — 255 — AMENDMENT OF PLEADINGS — NECESSITY OF EXCEPTIONS.

In the absence of exceptions taken to the justice's ruling sustaining demurrer and giving plaintiff leave to amend, his decision is final.

3. PLEADING — 225(3) — AMENDMENT — TIME OF FILING AMENDMENT.

When a single justice sustains demurrer and grants leave to amend the declaration, the amendment must actually be filed in compliance with court rule No. 8 (70 Atl. xiii), requiring it to be filed by the middle of vacation after the term at which the order was made.

4. PLEADING — 225(3) — AMENDMENT — TIME OF FILING AMENDMENT.

Where a single justice sustained demurrer and gave leave to file an amendment to the declaration, but plaintiff did not file the amendment by the middle of vacation after the term, in compliance with court rule No. 8 (70 Atl. xiii), and asked no extension, plaintiff was not entitled to file the amendment at a later time, notwithstanding defendant's objections, when the amendment was offered, were not based upon correct ground.

Exceptions from Supreme Judicial Court, Knox County, at Law.

Action by Raymond Tibbetts against the Dr. D. P. Ordway Plaster Company. On defendant's exceptions to the allowance of amendment to the declaration. Exceptions sustained.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

O. H. Emery, of Camden, for plaintiff. J. H. Montgomery, of Camden, for defendant.

CORNISH, C. J. On exceptions by defendant to the allowance of an amendment to the plaintiff's declaration. The writ in question was entered at the September term, 1917, of the Supreme Judicial Court for Knox county. At that term the defendant filed a general demurrer to the declaration. Hearing was had on this demurrer at the next or January term, 1918, the demurrer was sustained, and the plaintiff was given leave to amend; the docket entry being: "Demurrer sustained; plaintiff allowed to amend." No exceptions were taken by the plaintiff to this ruling. At the April term, following, the plaintiff filed an amendment which was allowed by the presiding justice. To this ruling the defendant excepts on two grounds: First, because no exceptions were taken to the ruling of the justice sustaining the demurrer at the January term, and no amendment was then offered and filed; and, second, because the amendment allowed at the April term was wholly new and inconsistent with the declaration, introducing, not an amendment, but a new cause of action.

[1] It is necessary to consider only the first ground. This involves the construction of Rev. St. c. 87, § 36. So much of that section as pertains to the point under consideration reads as follows:

"A general demurrer to the declaration may be filed; * * * but the justice shall rule on it, and his ruling shall be final unless the party aggrieved excepts; and before exceptions are filed and allowed, he has the same power as the full court to allow the plaintiff to amend, or the defendant to plead anew. * * * If the declaration is adjudged defective and is amendable, the plaintiff may amend upon payment of costs from the time when the demurrer was filed."

The defendant's contention is that under this statute only the justice who hears and determines the demurrer can allow an amendment, and it is not within the power of a justice at a subsequent term so to do; that the amendment must be filed and allowed at the same term as the decision on the demurrer is rendered or not at all.

We do not think this is the true interpretation of the language of the statute, and the history of the legislation on this point is both interesting and illuminating.

The original act regulating proceedings on demurrer and permitting amendments, in order to mitigate the severity of common-law pleading, was chapter 211 of P. L. of 1856. This act contemplated that the decision on both points should be made by the law court, and if the leave to amend was granted it should be only upon the payment of the defendant's costs from the time of filing the demurrer until the decision of the law court thereon; the action in the meantime being continued on the nisi prius docket to await the determination of the higher court.

This was enlarged the next year by conferring upon the presiding justice the power to pass upon the demurrer, viz.:

"Whenever a demurrer shall be filed and joined, the presiding justice shall rule thereon, and the ruling shall be final, unless the party aggrieved shall except to such ruling." P. L. 1857, c. 55, § 8.

The provisions of these two statutes were incorporated in the revision of 1857 as chapter 82, § 19. But the power of granting leave to amend was still reserved to the law court. In 1859, however, this power was also conferred upon the presiding justice before exceptions were filed and allowed, viz.:

"In all cases of general demurrer to the declaration after the presiding judge shall rule on the demurrer, and before exception filed and allowed, he shall have the same power to allow the plaintiff to amend or the defendant to plead anew, that the full court has by section nineteen of the chapter to which this is additional." Pub. L. 1859, c. 73.

This act was additional to section 19 of chapter 82 of the R. S. of 1857, before noted.

Since this enactment the presiding justice, when no exceptions are taken, has the same power as formerly the law court alone had, both to pass on the demurrer and on the question whether the plaintiff should be permitted to amend. Subsequent revisions retain this power. R. S. 1871, c. 82, § 19; Rev. St. 1883, c. 82, § 23; Rev. St. 1903, c. 84, § 35; Rev. St. 1918, c. 87, § 36.

[2] In the case at bar the presiding justice at the January term, 1918, sustained the demurrer and gave the plaintiff leave to amend. No exceptions to these rulings were taken. Therefore under the statute his ruling was final.

[3] The next question that arises is when the amendment itself should be filed, because there is a distinction between granting leave to amend and the allowing of the amendment itself. The former is an order permitting an act to be done; the latter is the doing of the act itself. The defendant claims it should have been filed at the January term; the plaintiff, that it could be filed at any subsequent term upon payment of costs subsequent to the filing of the demurrer. Neither contention is strictly accurate.

The time for filing the amendment when the matter is decided by the law court is regulated by statute. Prior to the passage of chapter 118 of P. L. 1915, it was required to be on the second day of the next term after the certificate of decision from the law court. Rollins v. Cent. Me. Power Co., 112 Me. 175, 91 Atl. 837. Since the passage of that act the time for filing the same or for payment of costs may be enlarged by leave of court. If this statute is not complied with, judgment must be entered on the demurrer.

When the decision is made by the presiding justice, and no exceptions are taken, the statute is silent as to the time of filing the amendment; the language of section 36 being:

"If the declaration is adjudged defective and is amendable, the plaintiff may amend upon payment of costs from the time when the demurrer was filed."

But this omission is provided for by rule of court No. 8 (70 Atl. xiii), which has the force of statute and is as follows:

"When an action shall be continued with leave to amend the declaration or pleadings, or for the purpose of making a special plea, replication, etc., if no time is expressly assigned for filing such amendment or pleadings, the same shall be filed in the clerk's office by the middle of the vacation after the term when the order is made; and in such case, the adverse party shall file his plea to the amended declaration * * * by the first day of the term to which the action is continued. If either party neglect to comply with this rule, all his prior pleadings shall be struck out and judgment entered of nonsuit or default, as the case may require, unless the court for good cause shown shall allow further time for filing such amendment or other pleadings."

This fixes the time of filing and the rights of the parties, and renders the procedure in case of a decision by the law court or by a single justice harmonious.

[4] In the case at bar the amendment was not filed by the middle of vacation, after the January term. The plaintiff neglected to comply with the rule, and by its terms judgment of nonsuit should have been entered after the expiration of the first day of the April term. No further time for filing was asked of the court. The mere filing of the amendment itself, after the prescribed time therefor had elapsed, cannot be regarded as a motion for extension of time, nor can the allowance of the amendment by the court be regarded as the granting of such a motion. These acts were without force. The rights of the parties had become fixed at the end of the first day of the April term (Rollins v. Cent. Maine Power Co., 112 Me. 175, 91 Atl. 837), and the defendant has waived none of the advantage which he thereby gained. He protested against the allowance of the amendment, and followed his protest with exceptions. The ground of his exception may not be the strictly legal one, but his acquired rights have been neither surrendered nor forfeited. He was entitled under the statute and the rule of court to a judgment of nonsuit, and the allowance of the amendment at the April term under the facts of this case was reversible error.

Exceptions sustained.

(117 Me. 437)

HASWELL v. WALKER.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Nov. 9, 1918.)

1. WITNESSES \S 81—DISQUALIFICATION OF PARTY—ABROGATION OF RULE.

At common law, a party to an action was not a competent witness at the trial; a rule abrogated by statute in England, Canada, and all the United States, and in Maine by Pub. Laws 1856, c. 266.

2. WITNESSES \S 138—COMPETENCY OF PARTIES—ACTION AGAINST EXECUTOR.

Rule of Pub. Laws 1856, c. 266, that parties are competent witnesses, is subject to exception that common-law rule of incompetency of parties to appear as witnesses obtains in actions by or against executors and administrators.

3. WITNESSES \S 126—COMPETENCY OF PARTIES—ACTIONS AGAINST ADMINISTRATORS—STATUTES.

Pub. Laws 1913, c. 137 (Rev. St. c. 87, § 127), providing that, in all actions on itemized account annexed to writ, affidavit of plaintiff may be used to make prima facie case, did not repeal Pub. Laws 1856, c. 266, excepting from its general abrogation of common-law rule, that parties are not competent as witnesses, parties in actions by or against executors and administrators.

4. STATUTES \S 224—CONSTRUCTION.

In the interpretation of statutes, the whole body of previous and contemporaneous legislation should be considered.

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS \S 221(6)—ACTION AGAINST ADMINISTRATOR—PAYMENT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action against an administrator for money paid over by plaintiff at decedent's request, evidence held insufficient to prove that decedent requested plaintiff to pay the money, and that it was paid in accordance with such request.

Exceptions from Supreme Judicial Court, Waldo County, at Law.

Action by Rhodnah L. Haswell against Charles L. Walker, administrator. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff excepta. Exceptions overruled.

Argued before SPEAR, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

H. C. Buzzell, of Belfast, for plaintiff. R. F. Dunton and Arthur Ritchie, both of Belfast, for defendant.

PHILBROOK, J. Two exceptions are presented for examination: First, the exclusion of an affidavit, made and offered by the plaintiff under the provisions of Rev. St. c. 87, § 127; second, an order of nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's evidence.

The section of the statute just referred to provides in part that—

"In all actions brought on an itemized account annexed to the writ, the affidavit of the plaintiff, made before a notary public using a seal, that the account on which the action is brought is a true statement of the indebtedness existing between the parties to the suit, with all proper credits given, and that the prices or items charged therein are just and reasonable, shall be prima facie evidence of the truth of the statement made in such affidavit, and shall entitle the plaintiff to the judgment, unless rebutted by competent and sufficient evidence."

The remaining words of the statute relate to the method of executing the affidavit in cases where the plaintiff is a corporation and are not involved in this case.

[1-4] The defendant urges several reasons why this affidavit was properly excluded, but it will be necessary to consider only one of those reasons. It is familiar law, too well established to need the citation of authorities, that at common law a party to an action was not a competent witness at the trial thereof. But this common law rule of incompetency, arising from interest, has been abrogated by statute in England, Canada, and in every one of the United States. This abrogation was adopted in Maine more than three score years ago by chapter 268, P. L. 1856. But the statutory rule that parties are competent witnesses is subject to an exception which is almost as general as the rule itself, namely, that the common-law rule of incompetency of parties appearing as witnesses still obtains in actions by or against executors and administrators. The abrogatory rule in our state, in the terms of its primal enactment, declared that the provisions of the act should not be applied to any case where, at the time of taking testimony, or the time of trial, the party prosecuting or the party defending, or any of them, shall be an executor or an administrator, or made a party as an heir of a deceased party. This rule, through all the intervening years, has retained its original language excepting in certain instances which do not affect the case at bar. Since the affidavit in question was made by the plaintiff, it is claimed by the defendant that it should be excluded because the plaintiff is not a competent witness, the action being one in which the party defending is an administrator. On the other hand, the plaintiff points out what he regards as most general language, in Rev. St. c. 87, § 127, which declares that "in all actions brought on an itemized account annexed to a writ" the affidavit of the plaintiff may be used. In effect the plaintiff claims that Rev. St. c. 87, § 127, enacted by the Legislature as chapter 187, P. L. 1913, repealed a most wholesome, salutary statute, which has repeatedly proved its beneficence during more than half a century, without the scant courtesy of specifically referring to the statute thus repealed. We cannot adopt this view. In the interpretation of statutes the whole body of previous and contemporaneous legislation should be considered, for the legislative department is supposed to have a consistent design and policy, and to intend nothing inconsistent or incongruous. Cummings v. Everett, 82 Me. 260, 19 Atl. 456. We do not hesitate, therefore, in declaring that, when the Legislature enacted the provisions for plaintiff's affidavit, in 1913, the plain intention of the law-making body was to limit the use of such affidavit to cases in which the plaintiff would be a competent witness under statutory provisions so long existing. There was no error in excluding the affidavit in this case.

[5] The order of nonsuit requires our examination of the record. The account annexed contains five items. The first charges for money paid Charlotte Stevens for and at the request of defendant's decedent, but does not disclose what the money was paid for. The other four charge for money paid the Lowell Fertilizer Company for fertilizer, in behalf of and at the request of the defendant's decedent. The only evidence offered by the plaintiff, except the excluded affidavit, is the testimony of an agent of the fertilizer company, who took written orders for the fertilizer signed by the plaintiff, not by the defendant's decedent. That witness gave no evidence regarding the first item in the account, but testified that he approached the plaintiff with a view of selling him some fertilizer. We quote practically his entire testimony:

"I asked Mr. Haswell if he wanted to buy some fertilizer.

"Q. (Mr. Dunton). Was Mr. Evans there?

"A. Mr. Evans was right there in the field; and he said, 'I haven't any use for any fertilizer; you will have to talk with'—I guess he called him Cap'n Flint, I don't remember the name—about it, because he is running things here.' So I went over and talked with the young man, and he gave me an order for the fertilizer. I put it down on that original contract, taking a carbon copy and leaving it with him, and then went over, and knowing that the boy—or they told me in the conversation that the boy had no real estate, and our company will not take an account unless there is some backing. I asked Mr. Haswell about it, and he said he would sign the contract for the boy and go good for the fertilizer. So we shipped the fertilizer to them, or they got it at Jackson & Hall's. I don't remember where they got it; I didn't deliver it myself, but he got the fertilizer and paid for it."

Giving this evidence its most liberal effect, it falls short of proving that the defendant's decedent requested the plaintiff to pay the money, and that it was paid in accordance with such request. The nonsuit was properly ordered.

Exceptions overruled.

(137 Me. 481)

MAXWELL v. DIRIGO MUT. FIRE INS. CO.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Nov. 9, 1918.)

INSURANCE §375(2)—WAIVER OF CONDITION—SALE WITHOUT CONSENT—POWER OF SECRETARY.

Insurer's secretary, who was acting in behalf and as agent of it in investigating and adjusting the loss, could waive breach of condition of the policy that sale without its written consent should render policy void.

2. ESTOPPEL §52—"WAIVER."

"Waiver" implies knowledge of the material facts and of one's rights, and a willingness to refrain from enforcing those rights, and is a voluntary surrender of known rights.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Waiver.]

3. INSURANCE §388(3)—BREACH OF CONDITION—ESTOPPEL TO CLAIM FORFEITURE.

Though insurer did not actually intend waiver of breach of condition of policy, if its conduct and declarations justified belief that it was intended, and, acting on the belief, insured incurred trouble and expense, and was subjected to delay, to his injury and prejudice, insurer may, on the principle of equitable estoppel, be prohibited from claiming forfeiture for the breach.

4. INSURANCE §388(3)—BREACH OF CONDITION—WAIVER OF ESTOPPEL.

Course of dealing between insured's trustee in bankruptcy and insurer for six months after fire, involving many interviews, much correspondence, preparation of proof of loss, adjustment of amount, and delay in bringing action and in settling estate, held to constitute waiver of, or estoppel to assert, any breach of condition against sale without consent.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR §1064(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

Plaintiff's right of action being unquestionably established, any error in instruction as to the ground thereof is not prejudicial to defendant.

Exceptions from Supreme Judicial Court, Penobscot County, at Law.

Action by James D. Maxwell, trustee in bankruptcy, against the Dirigo Mutual Fire Insurance Company. Verdict for plaintiff, and defendant brings exceptions and moves for new trial. Motion and exceptions overruled.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Ryder & Simpson, of Bangor, for plaintiff. Newell & Woodside, of Lewiston, for defendant.

CORNISH, C. J. The defendant company on July 6, 1912, issued its three-year policy of insurance in the sum of $1,150 to one Martin S. Guppy upon certain buildings and personal property owned by him in the town of Garland. On April 5, 1915, upon his voluntary petition, Guppy was adjudicated a bankrupt in the United States District Court. On May 25, 1915, the plaintiff was duly appointed trustee of the bankrupt estate and qualified as such. On July 3, 1915, the insured property was destroyed by fire.

The writ contains two counts; the first for the total amount of loss, with interest, aggregating $937.12, and the second for the amount alleged to have been agreed upon in compromise settlement, $527.50.

The defendant set up a breach of the conditions of the policy, in that without the company's assent the property had been sold; the contention being that the voluntary proceedings in bankruptcy, followed by the adjudication and the appointment of the trustee, constituted a sale of the property, within the meaning of the condition which rendered the policy void if, "without the written or printed assent of the company, the said property shall be sold."

The policy in terms insured "Martin S. Guppy and his legal representatives," and the presiding justice instructed the jury that, without any assignment made by Mr. Guppy and duly assented to by the company, the trustee was the legal representative of the bankrupt, stood in his place, and was entitled to bring and maintain this action under the terms of the policy. This instruction forms the basis of the defendant's exceptions. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $587.87, evidently the amount of the alleged compromise settlement, plus interest.

In deciding this case it is unnecessary to determine whether the transfer of property to a trustee by an adjudication in bankruptcy proceedings constitutes a "sale," within the purview of the policy, so as to render the policy void, nor whether a trustee in bankruptcy comes within the scope of the phrase "legal representatives," who, together with Martin S. Guppy, in this case were the parties insured.

[1-3] We rest our decision upon another principle of firmly established law, enunciated in Hanscom v. No. British, etc., Ins. Co., 90 Me. 833, 88 Atl. 324, and kindred cases, and hold that the conduct of this company, through its secretary, Mr. Millett, during a period of six months after the fire and close up to the time of bringing this suit, was such as to preclude the defendant from setting up the breach of conditions in defense, even if the facts here constitute such a breach—a point that we do not decide.

It cannot be doubted that it was within the power of the secretary, who was acting in behalf of and as agent of the company in investigating and adjusting the loss, to waive the breach of condition as to sale, if he desired so to do. A waiver implies knowledge of the material facts and of one's rights, and a willingness to refrain from enforcing those rights. "It is a voluntary surrender of known rights." Further than that, however:

"It may happen that a waiver of a breach of condition in the policy was not actually intended; but if the conduct and declaration of the insurer are of such a character as to justify a belief that a waiver was intended, and acting upon this belief the insured is induced to incur trouble and expense, and is subjected to delay, to his injury and prejudice, the insurer may be prohibited from claiming a forfeiture for such a breach, upon the principles of equitable estoppel." Hanscom v. Ins. Co., 90 Me. 333, 339, 38 Atl. 324, 326.

The elements mentioned—trouble, expense, prejudicial delay, and recognition of the continued existence of the policy—are all present here.

The fire occurred on July 3, 1915. Mr. Dearth, the mortgagee of the property, filed a proof of loss directly after the fire, and in that proof the fact that the plaintiff was trustee in bankruptcy was stated, and several letters passed between the mortgagee and the secretary. No objection was made to the proof by the company, although it then knew from its own records and files that the policy still stood in the name of Martin S. Guppy without assignment. A little later, the secretary, with one of the directors, investigated the fire. Then the secretary met the trustee on the street in Bangor, and told him that he had been out in Garland to investigate the fire, and that he desired a conference at some time in order to adjust the loss. The latter part of September or the 1st of October a conference was held. The agent went to the office of the referee in bankruptcy in Bangor, where the bankruptcy proceedings were pending, and the trustee was summoned to meet him. At that conference the agent made an offer of settlement, which, after some discussion, and also after consultation with the mortgagee, was rejected, as being too low. The agent then told the trustee he should require a proof of loss from him, and promised to send the trustee a blank.

Under date of October 4, 1915, the agent wrote the trustee that on arriving home he found he had on hand no blank proofs, but would secure some as soon as possible and send him one, adding that he expected to be in Bangor during the week, and would call, "hoping we can agree on loss." On October 11, 1915, one week later, the agent wrote the trustee, inclosing a blank proof, stating that he was just starting for Alberta to be gone the rest of the month, and adding: "We will adjust this matter on my return." On October 18, 1915, the proof of loss was prepared by the plaintiff, setting forth the facts relating to the bankruptcy proceedings in detail, and was signed, "James D. Maxwell, Trustee in Bankruptcy of the Estate of Martin S. Guppy, Bankrupt, the Assured." This was sent to the secretary on the same day, with a letter in which the trustee said:

"I trust that we shall be able to adjust this matter as soon as possible, as the estate is held up by reason of the insurance not being adjusted."

On October 14th the receipt of the proof of loss was acknowledged by the assistant secretary of the company, in the absence of the secretary. On November 9th Mr. Millett wrote to the trustee, stating that the proof had not been acted upon by the company, and he wished to see the trustee before presenting it to the company. On November 15th, Mr. Millett went to Bangor and held another conference with the trustee in regard to a settlement. The plaintiff claims that after considerable discussion and calculation Mr. Millett made an offer of $527.50 in full settlement and adjustment of the loss on both buildings and personal property, but he was unwilling to accept that amount without the sanction of the mortgagee. They could not reach the mortgagee by telephone, and the trustee suggested writing him. Finally the secretary said:

"Well, we ought to close this thing up; it's a small matter; so I guess, perhaps, you do that. You write to him, and find out what he will do, if he is satisfied with it, and then you let me know right off, and if it is satisfactory I will send you a check."

And the trustee replied:

"That is all right; that is fair enough."

We are convinced of the truth of the trustee's statement. He wrote Mr. Dearth under date of November 19th, obtained his acquiescence to the proposed adjustment, and on November 22d wrote to Mr. Millett, accepting his offer.

On November 26th Mr. Millett replied, saying:

"The law requires us to wait 45 days from the time proofs are filed with the company. We will submit your letter to the committee on losses and let you know in a few days."

But the promised advice did not follow, and after waiting until January 3, 1916, the trustee wrote again, saying:

"Will you kindly send me check for the amount of this claim, as per my letter of November 22d last. This matter is holding up the estate, and I should appreciate an early settlement."

On January 5th the secretary replied, regretting the delay, which he termed unavoidable, and for the first time raised any question as to the legality of the plaintiff's claim:

"We have been told that the policy should have been transferred to the trustee in order to make it legal, and I have asked our lawyers to look this matter up carefully. I expect to be in Bangor Monday night, and will give you our decision at that time. * * * Will you kindly look this matter up, relative to the assignment of the policy, and see what you find."

On January 7th the plaintiff wrote the secretary a rather sharp letter, demanding check, and protesting against the conduct of the secretary, and the unnecessary and prejudicial delay. This was answered by the attorney of the company, denying for the first time liability on the part of the company.

[4] If this course of dealing on the part of the company, carried on over a period of six months, involving many interviews, much correspondence, the preparation of proof of loss, the adjusting of the amount, and the delay both in bringing suit and in settling the bankrupt estate, does not constitute a waiver, or an equitable estoppel, we can conceive of no state of facts which could be so considered. Their mere rehearsal without comment brings them within the legal rule; and the doctrine which is universally accepted is a healthy one. It rests upon sound public policy and the ethics of fair dealing between man and man, as well as upon firmly fixed principles of equity. Peabody v. Acc. Ass'n, 89 Me. 96, 85 Atl. 1020; Hanscom v. Insurance Co., 90 Me. 333, 88 Atl. 824, supra, and cases cited; 14 R. C. L. 1197, and cases cited.

[5] In this view of the case, it is immaterial whether, as an abstract proposition of law, the instruction excepted to should or should not have been given. Under all the evidence in the case, the plaintiff's right of action is unquestionably established, and the verdict rendered was fully warranted. The plaintiff was legally entitled to what he has won. That is the main object of legal inquiry, before which mere academic technicalities fade away.

Motion and exceptions overruled.

(117 Me. 445)

LADD v. BEAN.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Nov. 12, 1918.)

1. WORK AND LABOR ⇨4(2)—RECOVERY FOR REASONABLE VALUE OF SERVICES.

Where one renders beneficial services to another, and the latter knowingly and with approbation accepts and avails himself of the services, the law ordinarily supposes a request and a promise to pay what the services are reasonably worth.

2. EVIDENCE ⇨584(3)—NUMBER OF WITNESSES.

Witnesses are to be judged, not so much by numbers, as by the weight of the evidence given by them.

3. EVIDENCE ⇨598(1)—PREPONDERANCE—NUMBER OF WITNESSES.

A simple, natural and reasonable narration by a single witness from his personal knowledge of the essentially complete details of a transaction is more convincing than the aggregate testimony of several witnesses, each apparently as reliable and as honest as the single one, but aware only partially of the facts of the case.

4. WORK AND LABOR ⇨9—EXPRESS CONTRACT—DEFENSE.

Plaintiff, who under express contract fairly made with defendant's testate, agreed to take care of testate's farm during their mutual pleasure from year to year in consideration of the use of the farm, could not recover upon an implied or quasi contract for wages and labor performed during the period covered by the contract.

On Motion from Supreme Judicial Court. York County.

Action by Walter S. Ladd against Eva E. Bean, as executrix of the will of Martha J. Merrill, deceased. On motion. Verdict for plaintiff set aside, and new trial granted.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

John P. Deering, of Biddeford, for plaintiff.

Eva E. Bean, of Saco, and Clarence Webber, of Biddeford, for defendant.

Stone & Stone, of Biddeford, for trustee.

DUNN, J. While she was yet living, Walter S. Ladd brought a civil suit against Martha J. Merrill, relying upon an implied or quasi contract, to recover a balance claimed to be due as wages for labor performed by him, from an indefinite time in the year of 1911 to December, 1915, on a farm in Saco, the title to which Mrs. Merrill then recently had acquired by inheritance from her father, but which she did not personally occupy. The case came on for trial, at a York term, in January, 1918, after Mrs. Merrill's death, and was defended, under a general denial of liability, by the executrix of her will.

In his writ the plaintiff says that from 1911 to 1912 he worked for the decedent 120 days, from 1912 to 1915 for 450 days, and in the year last mentioned 70 days, at $1.75 a day in each instance. Without being more specific, he extends debits which foot up to $1,220. He credits house rent, 43 months, at $5 a month, $215, and hay for his horse, 3 years, $219, the sum total of the two being $434, leaving a balance of $786. But there is error in his computation of the amount of the second debit item. It should be $100 less than as stated. Correction of this, and amendment likewise through the bill, would leave the balance $686. Verdict was for $582.42, equivalent to an allowance of approximately $1.59 a day.

For the establishment of his case, the plaintiff, himself precluded to testify (R. S. c. 87, § 117), called four witnesses, from a reading of the transcript of the testimony of whom it appears that the Merrill farm consisted of 25 to 30 acres of sterile land, with a 1½-story house and a barn, where Mr. Ladd came to live in 1911, and thence continued to dwell to and including all or a portion of 1915. During his occupancy, as these witnesses either traveled by the place or went there to traffic or for neighborly converse, they saw him at work on or about it. The farm was mainly set apart to the growing of grass for hay, but the annual yield was meager, not far from one-half ton to the acre—10 to 12 tons in all. The plaintiff help-and the fair inference of the case is that he fed out, 12 to 15 bushels of oats. His tillage comprised an acre, possibly an acre and one-half. On this he every year raised for his own use, and therefrom may have sold, too, potatoes, turnips, beans, corn, squash, cabbage, and other plants and vegetables. At odd times he cut down bushes growing along the wall by the roadside; he made slight repairs to the buildings, namely, by causing a plank to be put in the barn door that it might open and shut the better, and by renewing an outside door for the cellar. Not infrequently he worked away from home. The extent of his labor at the farm is variously estimated from one-third to one-half of the time in each year, and the usual daily wage of men in like employment stated to have been $1.50 to $1.75, with increase to $2.25 through the haying season.

[1] It is elementary to say that where one renders beneficial services to another, and the latter knowingly and with approbation accepts and avails himself of these services, the law ordinarily supposes a request and a promise to pay what they are reasonably worth; but the hypothesis is by no means conclusive. If a plaintiff produce evidence ample to prove a case unless answered, and the defendant replies, it then remains to be seen, following the ebb and flow of the testimony, whether that response be sufficient.

In this case a witness testified that, in his presence and hearing, Mrs. Merrill and Mr. Ladd, at the home of the former, entered into an agreement by the terms of which, for the consideration of its use and its revenue, exclusive of the hay crop (and of that enough, as is otherwise shown, for the feed of his horse), Ladd was to live on and take care of her farm, during the term, as the court concludes, of their mutual pleasure from year to year. Said the witness:

"They [Mrs. Merrill and Mr. Ladd] were talking about going on the farm. . . . He was to raise whatever he could there, and he was to have it, and he was to help Mr. Merrill to gather the hay, keep the bushes cut down, and look after things up there for the rent, as they wanted somebody there to cover the insurance."

[2, 3] Witnesses are to be judged, not so much by numbers, as by the weight of the evidence given by them; and the weight of the evidence depends upon its effect in inducing belief. Simple, natural, and reasonable narration by a single witness, from his personal knowledge, of the essentially complete details of a transaction should and does, stamp conviction on an impartial mind conscientiously seeking truth, to a greater degree than the aggregate testimony of several witnesses, each apparently as reliable and as honest as the single one, but aware only partially of the facts of the case, and whose attestations are equally consistent

[4] The defendant's witness is discredited, uncontradicted, and of credibility challenged. The tale that he told is There is evidence that the plaintiff v the farm and buildings in dilatory stance with Mrs. Merrill's request to remove. That asking may have caused to be displeased with a compact fairly But to rue his contract so created, with the reason, would not justify its removal and the recovery of damages less thereof, for the law will not estimate of proper advantage to man the undue ing of the word that he plighted in stance with her terms. In fine, with performance of the agreement which he and the defendant's testate made, the plaintiff would be content and satisfied. At all events should cease to complain.

The verdict was not founded on a full scrutiny and examination of the evidence. It is so palpably wrong as to vitiate the court to set it aside and grant a new trial.

Motion sustained.

New trial granted.

(117 M

HOBBS v. HURLEY.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. No 1918.)

1. CONTRIBUTION §5—"JOINT TORT-FEASORS."

As between "joint-feasors" in part d which means persons who by concert of intentionally commit the wrong complained there is no right of contribution.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see V and Phrases, First and Second Series, Tort-Feasors.]

2. CONTRIBUTION §5—JOINT TORT-FEASORS.

Contribution may be enforced between tort-feasors not intentional and willful wrongdoers, but such only by legal inference of contribution.

3. CONTRIBUTION §5—JOINT TORT-FEASORS—NEGLIGENCE.

Rule denying contribution as between tort-feasors has no application to torts which are result of mere negligence in carrying on full transaction, as transportation of passengers in automobile; parties being tort-feasors willfully but by inference of law.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT §301(1)—LIABILITY FOR SERVANT'S NEGLIGENCE—CHAUFFEUR.

Where chauffeur driving automobile agent of borrowers of car, though they were in it, his want of care toward third person in eye of law was imputable to them, under doctrine of respondeat superior.

5. CONTRIBUTION §5—JOINT TORT-FEASORS.

Where plaintiff and defendant borrowed automobile and their agent, the chauffeur, negligent in driving it, to injury of third person, plaintiff could have contribution from defendant for damages he paid, as their wrongdoing was not intentional, and they were tort-feasors only by implication of law.

6. JUDGMENT ¶470—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

A judgment unreversed is not open to collateral attack, unless it was obtained by fraud, or unless want of jurisdiction appears on face of record.

7. CONTRIBUTION ¶7—JOINT TORT-FEASORS—AMOUNT.

Where plaintiff's and defendant's chauffeur injured third person, and latter sued plaintiff and defendant, and two others, in whose favor judgment was given, but against plaintiff and defendant, which was paid by plaintiff, he could recover as contribution one-half of his payment from defendant, and was not limited to a quarter.

8. MASTER AND SERVANT ¶801(4)—LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE OF ANOTHER'S SERVANT.

A passenger in an automobile was not liable for injuries to third person caused by negligence of chauffeur.

9. MASTER AND SERVANT ¶813—TORT OF SERVANT—JOINT LIABILITY OF MASTER AND SERVANT.

Where chauffeur whose negligence caused injury to third person was servant of plaintiff and defendant, judgment could not be rendered against him, and also against plaintiff and defendant in joint suit against them, as master and servant cannot be held jointly liable for servant's negligent act, except for trespass at command of master.

10. JUDGMENT ¶240—JOINT JUDGMENT—AGAINST SERVANT AND MASTER.

Third person injured by negligence of chauffeur in driving automobile had right to bring suit either against the chauffeur or against his masters, but could not recover joint judgment against all.

Report from Supreme Judicial Court, Knox County, at Law.

Action by Josiah H. Hobbs against William P. Hurley. On report from the Supreme Judicial Court. Judgment for plaintiff.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Charles T. Smalley, of Rockland, for plaintiff. A. S. Littlefield, of Rockland, for defendant.

CORNISH, C. J. This is an action on the case to recover from the defendant the sum of $274.05 as contribution towards the payment of a joint judgment rendered against both the plaintiff and defendant, the entire sum having been paid by the plaintiff.

The material facts leading up to this action are, briefly, as follows: On September 7, 1912, one Jethro D. Pease was thrown from his wagon and injured by reason of an automobile, driven by one Herrick as chauffeur, suddenly backing against and frightening the horse of Pease and causing him to cramp the wheels. The automobile was owned by Mr. Montgomery, and an action of negligence was first brought against him by Pease; but it was held that the suit could not be maintained, because, while Mr. Montgomery was the owner of the machine, he was not in the possession, control, and management of it, nor was the chauffeur acting as his servant at the time of the injury. Pease v. Montgomery, 111 Me. 582, 88 Atl. 978.

Then suit was brought by Pease against Messrs. Gardner, Hobbs, Hurley, and Herrick, and judgment was rendered in favor of the then plaintiff against Messrs. Hobbs and Hurley, the parties in the case at bar, in the sum of $500, and judgment in favor of Gardner and Herrick. Pease v. Gardner, 113 Me. 264, 98 Atl. 550. The liability of Messrs. Hobbs and Hurley was placed upon the ground that they had secured this automobile from its owner, Mr. Montgomery, to take Mr. Gardner, and perhaps others, who were on a political speaking campaign, from Rockland to other towns in Knox county; that for that trip they had the legal possession, control, and management of the car and were responsible therefor; that the engagement and operation of the car was a joint enterprise on their part as chairmen of certain political committees, and Herrick, the chauffeur, was for the time being their servant.

The defendant raises two contentions: First, that the parties to this action against whom the judgment was rendered were joint tort-feasors, and that one joint tort-feasor cannot enforce contribution from another; second, if the plaintiff is legally entitled to recover, it is only for one-fourth of the amount of the joint judgment, as four persons were involved in the original transaction which was the basis of the judgment.

1. Right of Contribution.

[1] It is undoubtedly a general rule of law that as between joint tort-feasors, in pari delicto, there is no right of contribution.

The reason of the rule is that the law will not lend its aid to him who founds his cause of action upon an immoral or illegal act. It leaves him where it finds him. The leading case is Merryweather v. Nixan, 8 T. R. 186, and this has been uniformly and consistently followed. The term "tort-feasor," as used here, applies to persons who by concert of action intentionally commit the wrong complained of.

[2] But an exception to this rule is equally well settled, and that is that when the parties are not intentional and willful wrongdoers, but are made wrongdoers by legal inference or intentment, are involuntary and unintentional tort-feasors, so to speak, then the preceding rule does not apply, and contribution may be enforced. The rule ceases because the reason for it has ceased. Contribution is not contractual. It is an equitable right founded on acknowledged principles of natural justice and enforceable in a court of law.

The exception was suggested by Lord Kenyon in Merryweather v. Nixan, supra, which announced the rule, and has been fully developed and recognized by later decisions, both in England and this country. Betts v. Gibbons, 2 Ad. & Ell. 57; Pearson v. Skelton, 1 Mees. & Wels. 504; Wooley v. Batte, 2 Car. & P. 417; Bailey v. Bussing, 28 Conn. 455; Id., 37 Conn. 349; Acheson v. Miller, 2 Ohio St. 208; 59 Am. Dec. 663; Jacobs v. Pollard, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 287, 57 Am. Dec. 105; Nickerson v. Wheeler, 118 Mass. 295; 6 R. C. L. 1055, and cases cited.

The distinction between the two classes of cases, and therefore between the rule and the exception, was clearly set forth by the Massachusetts court in these words:

"It is undoubtedly the policy of the law to discountenance all actions in which a party seeks to enforce a demand originating in a willful breach or violation, on his part, of the legal rights of others. Courts of law will not lend their aid to those who found their claims upon an illegal transaction. No one can be permitted to relieve himself from the consequences of having intentionally committed an unlawful act, by seeking an indemnity or contribution from those with whom or by whose authority such unlawful act was committed. But justice and sound policy, upon which this salutary rule is founded, alike require that it should not be extended to cases where parties have acted in good faith, without any unlawful design, or for the purpose of asserting a right in themselves, or others, although they have thereby infringed upon the legal rights of third persons. It is only when a person knows, or must be presumed to know, that his act was unlawful, that the law will refuse to aid him in seeking an indemnity or contribution. It is the unlawful intention to violate another's rights, or a willful ignorance and disregard of those rights, which deprives a party of his legal remedy in such cases. It has therefore been held that the rule of law, that wrongdoers cannot have redress or contribution against each other, is confined to those cases where the person claiming redress or contribution knew, or must be presumed to have known, that the act, for which he has been mulcted in damages, was unlawful." Jacobs v. Pollard, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 287, supra.

[3] It may be safely asserted that the rule denying the right of contribution as between joint tort-feasors has no application to torts which are the result of mere negligence in carrying on some lawful transaction. In such cases the parties are tort-feasors, not willfully, but by inference of law, and the term itself seems disproportionately harsh under such circumstances.

[4, 5] The application of this exception to the facts in the case at bar is obvious. As was said in the former case:

"The engagement and operation of the car on this special trip seem to have been a joint enterprise on the part of Capt. Hurley and Mr. Hobbs, who were interested in a common undertaking." Pease v. Gardner, 118 Me. at 267, 93 Atl. 550.

That undertaking was entirely lawful, the transportation of certain parties from one place to another. No element of wrongdoing attached to it. In fact, so far as the evidence discloses, neither the plaintiff nor the defendant was present at the time of the accident. But as the car was legally under their possession and control, as they were the owners pro hac vice, as Herrick the chauffeur was their agent, his want of care toward third persons in the eye of the law was imputable to them under the doctrine of respondeat superior. However, there was no voluntary, wilful, and intentional wrongdoing on their part. There was no community of wrong, and there could have been none. Therefore, the plaintiff having paid the entire sum for which he and his quondam partner were jointly liable, he can recover of the defendant his proportional part or one-half thereof. Any other result would be illogical and unjust.

2. Amount of Contribution.

[6, 7] As four persons seem to have been concerned with the transaction, Messrs. Gardner, Hobbs, Hurley, and Herrick, the defendant claims that, if forced to contribute at all, contribution on his part should be limited to one-fourth of the amount of the judgment.

The answer to this contention is twofold:

In the first place, all four of these persons were joined as defendants in the former suit, and their liability or nonliability was there determined. Judgment was rendered against Hobbs and Hurley, while it was held that the action should not be maintained against Gardner and Herrick. That judgment still stands unreversed and is not open to collateral attack unless it was obtained by fraud or unless want of jurisdiction appears on the face of the record. Toothaker v. Greer, 92 Me. 546, 48 Atl. 498; Winslow v. Troy, 97 Me. 180, 53 Atl. 1008. The rights of the parties were fixed by that judgment, and it constitutes the impregnable basis of this suit. Contribution must be of one-half the amount.

[8] In the second place, the result is as it should be under the law. Mr. Gardner was merely a passenger, and no liability attached to him.

[9] The chauffeur, Herrick, was the active party in the negligent act creating the liability; but, as he was at the time the servant of Hobbs and Hurley, judgment could not be rendered against him and also against Hobbs and Hurley in a joint suit, as both master and servant cannot be held jointly liable for a negligent act. The reason is that joint tort-feasorship in cases of negligence necessarily implies a community of interest in the object and purposes of the undertaking and an equal right to govern and direct the conduct of each other in respect thereto, and master and servant cannot be said to engage in a common enterprise because that relation is inconsistent with the relation of master and servant. Hence the rule. Parsons v. Winchell, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 592, 52 Am. Dec. 745; Mulchey v. Meth. Relig. Soc., 125 Mass. 487; Hill v. Murphy, 212 Mass. 1-4, 98 N. E. 781, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1102, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 374; Bailey v. Bussing, 37 Conn. 349; Bet- cher v. McChesney, 255 Pa. 394, 100 Atl. 124. In this we are not speaking of actions of trespass where the wrong is inflicted at the command of the superior, but of ordinary actions of negligence.

We are aware that in some jurisdictions joint actions against master and servant have been allowed even in cases of negligence. Mayberry v. No. Pac. Ry. Co., 100 Minn. 79, 110 N. W. 356, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 675, 10 Ann. Cas. 754 and note. But our court has adopted with approval the doctrine and reasoning of the Massachusetts court. Campbell v. Portland Sugar Co., 62 Me. 552, 566, 16 Am. Rep. 503.

[10] The injured party, Pease, had the right to bring suit against either the servant or the masters, but could not recover a joint judgment against all. Duryee v. Hale, 31 Conn. 217; Bailey v. Bussing, 37 Conn. 352.

Here judgment was obtained against the masters alone, and the servant was properly omitted.

Our conclusion therefore is that this action for contribution is maintainable, and the entry should be Judgment for plaintiff for $274.05, with interest from date of the writ.

Woodman & Whitehouse, of Portland, for complainant. W. K. & A. E. Neal, Linwood F. Crockett, Samuel L. Bates, John J. Devine, and William H. Murray, all of Portland, Collins, Collins & Burke, Sydney B. Larrabee, of Portland, and John Mitchell Jones, of Los Angeles, Cal., for respondents.

PHILBROOK, J. This is a bill in equity, brought under R. S. c. 82, § 6, subd. 10, to determine the construction of certain provisions of the will, in which the plaintiff is named as executor and trustee. He declares that:

"He is in doubt as to the true and proper construction of said will, to wit, as to whether he may lawfully distribute the remainder of said trust estate at the present time, prior to the death of said Sarah M. Roberts, and before the happening of all the three events which were expressly made, by the terms of said will, a condition precedent to the final distribution of said estate, and as to whether or not the estate of said Annie B. Roberts is entitled to any part of the balance of the estate of said testator under said will, and, if so, what part, when a final distribution may lawfully be made; also as to what is the proper time for the final distribution of the balance of said estate, and as to who are the legatees, or class of legatees, among whom it is to be distributed when the proper time for distribution arrives, and also at what time the balance of said estate is to vest in such legatees."

In the court below the bill was sustained. The decree of the learned justice, with some minuteness of detail, also answered the many other questions raised by the plaintiff. From this decree the case comes to this court by appeal.

Time of Final Distribution. The testator provided for final distribution after the occurrence of three events, viz., the death of his sister, Sarah E. Roberts, the death of his brother's widow, Sarah M. Roberts, and the maturity of a certain endowment bond in which Alfred Roberts, Jr., was the original beneficiary, either by the lapse of the time mentioned in the bond or by the death of Alfred Roberts, Jr. It is conceded that the sister, Sarah E. Roberts, is dead, that the bond has matured by lapse of time, but that Sarah M. Roberts is still living. On February 16, 1917, one John Mitchell Jones, who now claims to be attorney in fact and of record for Alfred Roberts, Jr., filed in the probate court a petition for the distribution of the balance of the estate, alleging that said Sarah M. Roberts was ready and willing to waive, and had waived any and all right, title, or interest, present or prospective, accruing or accrued to her under any of the terms of said will. In her answer to this bill, Sarah M. Roberts declared that such waiver, release, or assignment was obtained by fraud, false representations, and duress, that there was no consideration for the same, and that it was and always had been null, void, and of no effect. The decree of the learned justice, upon this contention of fact,

(117 Me. 465)

MORRILL v. ROBERTS et al.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Nov. 16, 1918.)

1. WILLS \Leftrightarrow 695(4) — ACTION TO CONSTRU — HYPOTHETICAL QUESTIONS.

Where bill is brought under Rev. St. c. 82, § 6, subd. 10, to determine if remainder can be distributed prior to occurrence of an event, and to determine distributees, the court, upon holding that final distribution cannot take place until occurrence of condition precedent, will not name distributees.

2. WILLS \Leftrightarrow 707(1) — BILL TO CONSTRU WILL — DISTRIBUTION OF ALLOWANCE FOR ATTORNEY'S FEES.

In proceedings under Rev. St. c. 82, § 6, subd. 10, to construe a will, where counsel cannot agree as to how the allowance for attorney's fees should be distributed between the attorneys for the different parties, the distribution should be determined by the sitting justice who signs decree.

Appeal from Supreme Judicial Court, Cumberland County, in Equity.

Bill by Carroll W. Morrill, executor and trustee under the will of Alfred Roberts, against Alfred Roberts, Jr., and others. Bill sustained. From the decree rendered an appeal is taken. Appeal sustained, and temporary injunction made permanent. Decree in accordance with opinion.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

upheld the claim of Sarah M. Roberts, and we unhesitatingly approve this finding. The final distribution of the balance in the hands of the plaintiff is therefore postponed until the death of Sarah M. Roberts, and the plaintiff is ordered to pay her all annuities overdue and unpaid, with interest from the dates when each annuity became due, and to pay her such annuities in the future as may be demanded by the terms of the will.

[1] Until such time as final distribution is to be made, it is not necessary to determine or advise as to whom such distribution shall be made, since future conditions, and future existence of the persons to whom distribution may be made, can only be determined hypothetically.

[2] The decree of the sitting justice provided for payment of counsel fees, costs, and expenses, out of the estate; but it is the opinion and order of this court that, exclusive of cash disbursements, the total amount to be allowed for attorney's fees shall be $500; the sitting justice by whom decree below will be signed, to determine the distribution of such sum among counsel, providing they cannot agree thereto.

Appeal sustained.

Bill sustained.

Temporary injunction made permanent.

Decree in accordance with opinion.

(117 Me. 468)

BATCHELDER v. BICKFORD.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Nov. 19, 1918.)

1. EQUITY \S 373—WAIVER OF REPLICATION—STIPULATION—EFFECT.

Case being by agreement reported for decision on the bill and answer, plaintiff waives her replication, and allegations of answer are to be taken as true.

2. MORTGAGES \S 596, 597 — REDEMPTION — ADVERSE POSSESSION BY MORTGAGEE.

Facts stated in answer in suit to redeem from mortgage held to show that mortgagee's possession for 20 years was unequivocally adverse to mortgagor and those claiming under him, barring right of redemption.

3. MORTGAGES \S 596, 597 — REDEMPTION — RIGHT OF MORTGAGOR'S WIFE.

By reason of the right by descent which under Rev. St. c. 80, § 17, a widow has in land mortgaged by her husband before marriage, she during marriage has a right of redemption, as regards the running of time thereafter against mortgagor in adverse possession.

Report from Supreme Judicial Court, Penobscot County, in Equity.

Suit by Matilda H. Ferguson Batchelder against Edwin F. Bickford. Case reported. Bill dismissed.

Argued before SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

U. G. Mudgett, of Bangor, for plaintiff. Morse & Cook, of Bangor, for defendant.

MORRILL, J. [1] This is a bill in equity to redeem from a mortgage. The plaintiff filed a general replication, but by agreement of parties the case is reported to the law court for decision upon the bill and answer. The plaintiff thereby waived her replication, and the facts stated in the answer are to be taken as true. Dascomb v. Marston, 80 Me. 223, 230, 18 Atl. 888.

The mortgage was dated and delivered March 16, 1878. The mortgagor, Isaiah Ferguson, and the plaintiff were married in the year 1886. He died May 8, 1901, leaving the plaintiff as his widow. The answer contains the following material statement of facts:

"The defendant admits that on the 22d day of July, 1895, he entered upon and took possession of the premises described in said mortgage and has ever since continued in possession and received the rents and profits of said real estate; and the defendant alleges that he entered peaceably and openly, no one opposing, in the presence of two witnesses, and took possession of the premises in the character of mortgagee, and by virtue of his mortgage only, and that since the 22d day of July, A. D. 1896, he has held possession of the premises without acknowledging a subsisting mortgage, and without accounting, and without admitting that he held only as mortgagee, during which period last named he has treated said real estate as his own and as if said mortgage never existed."

The mortgage contains an agreement:

"That the right of redeeming the above-mortgaged premises shall be forever foreclosed in one year next after the commencement of foreclosure by any of the methods now provided by law."

[2] The sole question for decision upon these undisputed facts is whether on the day of demand, July 21, 1917, the plaintiff had a right to redeem from the mortgage. The question must be answered in the negative.

It is well settled, as claimed by the defendant, that, if a mortgagee enters into possession of the mortgaged premises after condition broken without taking the steps provided by statute to foreclose the mortgage, it is open to redemption for 20 years. But if the mortgagor and those claiming under him permit the mortgagee to hold possession for 20 years without accounting and without admitting that he holds only as mortgagee, his title becomes absolute and the right of redemption is lost. Roberts v. Littlefield, 48 Me. 61; Frisbee v. Frisbee, 86 Me. 444, 29 Atl. 1115; Hughes v. Edwards, 9 Wheat. 489, 6 L. Ed. 142, and cases cited in 2 Rose's Notes, p. 66; Munro v. Barton, 98 Me. 250, 56 Atl. 844.

"It is obviously the adverse character of the possession, however, and not the mere fact of possession by the mortgagee for 20 years, that will operate to convert the mortgage title into an absolute one. . . . To constitute a bar to such right (of redemption), it must appear that the mortgagee's possession is unequivocally adverse to the mortgagor, or to those claiming under him." Munro v. Barton, supra.

It is the opinion of the court that the admitted facts stated in the answer clearly show that defendant's possession was "unequivocally adverse" to the mortgagor and those claiming under him.

[3] Plaintiff's counsel earnestly contends that the defendant's possession did not begin to operate against his client's right to redeem until her husband's death. Her husband having died seised of premises mortgaged before their marriage, the plaintiff was entitled to her right and interest by descent in the mortgaged premises, as against every person except the mortgagee and those claiming under him. R. S. c. 80, § 17. It is plain that she had such an interest in the mortgaged premises as would permit her to redeem from the mortgage in the lifetime of her husband. Tuttle v. Davis et al., 114 Me. 109, 95 Atl. 518. "It may be stated in general terms that any one who has an interest in the premises, and who would be a loser by foreclosure, is entitled to redeem." Frisbee v. Frisbee, 86 Me. 444, 29 Atl. 1115. Therefore the plaintiff had the full period of 20 years in which to redeem, and her right must now be considered barred.

Bill dismissed, with costs.

(117 Me. 471)

LAMBERT v. LAMBERT.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Nov. 19, 1918.)

1. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION ¶52(1) — RIGHT OF SURVIVING SPOUSE — PROPERTY AFFECTED — "ESTATE OF A TESTATOR OR TESTATRIX."

Rev. St. 1916, c. 80, § 14, as to right of surviving spouse in "estate of a testator or testatrix," applies only to property left by deceased at death, and does not relate to personal property with which deceased had parted during life, either by gift or sale.

2. WILLS ¶90 — "GIFT CAUSA MORTIS" — DISTINGUISHED FROM "TESTAMENT."

"Gift causa mortis" is distinguished from "testament," in that testament requires no delivery and takes effect at death, while gift causa mortis requires delivery and (subject to revocation) takes effect on delivery.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Gift Causa Mortis; Testament.]

3. GIFTS ¶71 — GIFTS CAUSA MORTIS — VALIDITY.

Gifts causa mortis, clearly proved, or admitted, are valid and operated against all but creditors, unless they may be invalidated for fraud.

4. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION ¶69 — GIFTS CAUSA MORTIS — FRAUD.

A gift causa mortis is not necessarily and inevitably fraudulent against surviving spouse of donor.

Exceptions from Supreme Judicial Court, Franklin County.

Action by Mertie A. Lambert against James M. Lambert, with an appeal by James M. Lambert from decree of judge of probate. In both cases the trial justice ruled against said James M. Lambert and he brings exceptions. Exceptions overruled.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, MORRILL, WILSON, and DEASY, JJ.

McGillicuddy & Morey, of Lewiston, for Mertie A. Lambert.

C. W. Blanchard, of Wilton, and J. B. Morrison, of Phillips, for James M. Lambert.

DEASY, J. One point only is presented by the exceptions in these cases, to wit: That under existing statutes gifts causa mortis are in this state invalid.

James M. Lambert is defendant in one case, and appellant in the other. For convenience we shall refer to him as the defendant.

Augusta E. Lambert, owning a promissory note of the defendant, indorsed and delivered it to Mertie A. Lambert as a gift causa mortis. Augusta E. Lambert afterward died testate, and Mertie A. Lambert was made executrix of her will. The executrix did not include the note in the inventory of the estate. Individually she brought suit upon it. Hence the two proceedings. In both the presiding justice ruled that "a gift causa mortis of personal property, as in this case, is a valid gift." To these rulings the defendant excepted.

The printed case does not show the relationship between the defendant and Augusta E. Lambert. Counsel for both parties, however, in their briefs assume that he is her surviving husband. If the defendant's contention is that gifts causa mortis are under all circumstances invalid, we perceive no reason and find no authority to sustain such proposition. There are, however, respectable authorities holding that gifts causa mortis, being in the nature of testaments, are invalid as to surviving husbands or wives. For the purpose of reaching and passing upon what we understand to be the real merits of the case, we shall assume that the defendant is the surviving husband of Augusta E. Lambert, and that the exceptions raise the question of the validity of such a gift as against him.

[1] The defendant bases his claim upon chapter 160 of the Public Laws of 1903, as amended by chapter 260 of the Public Laws of 1906, and incorporated in the Revised Statutes of 1916 as section 14 of chapter 80.

One contention is that under the statute above cited a husband has an interest in the nature of a vested right in his wife's personal property, which he cannot be deprived of without his consent. Were this contention well founded, it would, of course, follow that a wife has a similar interest in her husband's personal property. This doctrine, if admitted, would invalidate, not only gifts causa mortis, but also gifts inter vivos, and sales by husbands or wives without consent of the other. But the statute neither creates nor recognizes such rights. It applies only to property left by a husband or wife at death. The statute refers only to "estate of has parted with during life, either by gift or sale.

[2, 3] The defendant contends that a gift causa mortis is tantamount to a testamentary disposition, without the safeguards and formalities required in the case of a testament. To so hold we would have to go contrary to the multitude of cases wherein courts and jurists have uniformly sustained and sanctioned such gifts. The distinction between testaments and gifts causa mortis is clear. The former require no delivery and take effect at death. The latter require delivery and (subject to revocation) take effect upon delivery.

The defendant cites and relies upon Nichols v. Nichols et al., 61 Vt. 430, 18 Atl. 153. This case is not quite in point. It does not involve the validity of gifts causa mortis, nor does it mention or refer to such gifts. The case of Thayer v. Thayer, 14 Vt. 107, 39 Am. Dec. 211, also cited by the defendant, holds an alleged gift causa mortis ineffective for want of delivery.

The defendant also relies upon the New Hampshire cases of Baker v. Smith, 66 N. H. 422, 23 Atl. 82, and Jones v. Brown, 84 N. H. 439. These cases arose under a statute substantially similar to ours. They hold that gifts causa mortis are valid, but, being "a form of testamentary disposition," are inoperative as to surviving husbands.

The great weight of authority, however, is to the effect that gifts causa mortis clearly proved, or, as in the cases at bar, admitted, are valid and operative against all but creditors. We might cite numerous authorities, but think it necessary to refer only to Wright v. Holmes, 100 Me. 508, 62 Atl. 507, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 769, 4 Ann. Cas. 583, and Marshall v. Berry (Mass.) 13 Allen, 43, and cases cited therein.

[4] Whether or not conditions may exist invalidating an attempted gift causa mortis by reason of fraud we are not called upon to decide. Nothing in these cases shows fraud, unless such a gift is necessarily and inevitably fraudulent as against a surviving spouse. The law does not justify this court in so holding.

The entry in both cases must be:
Exceptions overruled.

(33 N. J. Eq. 365)

WALSH v. WALSH.

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
Nov. 19, 1917.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE — 297 — SEPARATE MAINTENANCE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held sufficient to support a decree for separate maintenance upon the ground of the husband's cruelty, compelling the wife to live apart from him.

Walsh for separate maintenance. Decree for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

On appeal from a decree of the Court of Chancery advised by Vice Chancellor Leaming, who filed the following opinion:

The evidence in this suit fully establishes the fact that defendant's conduct toward his wife has been such as to deny to him the right to now require her to share his home.

In this state to justify a wife in leaving her husband's home or in refusing to share the home of his selection on account of his cruelty, physical violence need not be shown, but such conduct of the husband must be shown as will reasonably convince the court that at or prior to the time of their separation her life or health was in danger; or that her life was by his conduct rendered one of such extreme discomfort and wretchedness as to incapacitate her to discharge the duties of a wife; or that the conduct of the husband, if continued, would have brought about those conditions. Unless complainant and the several children of the marriage who have testified in her behalf have willfully and deliberately testified to falsehoods touching defendant's conduct, the very conditions above suggested existed in defendant's home at the time of the separation. I am unable to doubt the truth of their statements and am equally unable to believe the denials of defendant.

A review of the testimony seems unnecessary. Much of defendant's misconduct may be attributed to the influence of alcohol and his dissatisfaction with some of his children and their presence in his home; but that fact affords no justification for his misconduct. I am convinced that the children fully believed that their presence in the home was necessary for their mother's safety, and I share with them that belief.

It follows that an order must be made compelling defendant to contribute to complainant's support.

In making an order of that nature, I believe it to be the duty of a court to carefully limit the order to the demands of necessity as discerned by the condition and station in life of complainant and the ability of defendant to pay. An order for an amount calculated to render separation attractive to complainant is, in my judgment, unwarranted by a statute that favors cohabitation and contemplates only suitable support and maintenance during the period of separation. Complainant has some means of her own; defendant's income is limited. At this time complainant is occupying a property owned by defendant and is paying no rent. I will advise an order for the payment of $10 per week. In the event of complainant being denied the occupancy of the property where she now lives, the amount may be suitably increased. Complainant's solicitor may be allowed a counsel fee of $100.

Linton Satterthwait, of Trenton (John T. Van Cleef, of Trenton, on the brief), for appellant. Peter Backes, of Trenton, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is a suit by a wife for maintenance under the statute. The vice chancellor advised a decree for complainant. The case turns on findings of fact alone, and, after a full examination of the evidence, we conclude that it is adequate to support the decree made, which will therefore be affirmed.

(88 N. J. Eq. 496)

DUNLAP v. CHENOWETH et al.

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. Nov. 17, 1917.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. USURY §53—REQUISITES—WITHHOLDING OF PART OF LOAN AS BONUS.

A corrupt bargain, to contravene the statute, is essential to sustain a plea of usury. Withholding of a part of the loan as a bonus, without a previous agreement to that effect, does not constitute usury.

2. USURY §111(2)—PLEADING—ANSWER.

The defense of usury must be timely and strictly pleaded, and the answer must set out the particular facts and circumstances of the alleged usurious agreement.

3. USURY §117—DECREE—REDUCTION.

Under the evidence in this case, held, that complainant is entitled to a decree, with a reduction in the amount claimed.

Bill for foreclosure by James M. Dunlap against Emma L. Chenoweth and others, defended on the ground of usury. Decree for complainant, less certain amounts, with interest, etc.

Horace F. Nixon, of Camden (Bleakly & Stockwell, of Camden, of counsel), for complainant.

John Boyd Avis, of Woodbury, for defendants.

BACKES, V. C. This is the usual foreclosure bill, and the defense is usury. The bond and mortgage were made by the defendant Emma L. Chenoweth to Horace F. Nixon, a member of the Camden bar, who evidently deals extensively in mortgage investments. According to his own statement, he has negotiated loans for more than $9,000,000, mostly in small sums. Mrs. Chenoweth, sorely pressed by creditors, applied to him for a loan of $12,000 on her home in Woodbury, and agreed to pay him $240 to procure it. The mortgage was to be for one, two, or three years, at 5 per cent., if possible; if not, at 5½ or 6 per cent. Apparently unable to find a lender as quickly as her circumstances demanded, Mr. Nixon advanced the money himself. He liquidated the fixed liabilities upon the mortgaged property and gave to Mrs. Chenoweth his check in payment of the difference, after deducting a brokerage of 2 per cent., the alleged usury. The bond was written at 6 per cent., with the understanding that Mr. Nixon was to place the loan at 5 per cent., if possible. He sold the mortgage to the complainant, Dunlap, giving him his written guaranty for the prompt payment of the principal and interest, for a commission of 1 per cent., a practice that was quite common with him. Although the defendant is in arrears since August, 1914, Mr. Nixon has regularly paid the interest at the rate of 5 per cent. His dealings with the complainant, and through them his ability to reap, for a time, 1 per cent. on the loan, were not disclosed by Mr. Nixon to his client, Mrs. Chenoweth. Now, advised by counsel of the consequences of this lapse of duty, and moved, perhaps, by the intimations in a memorandum opinion filed in this suit by another Judge, he has, in open court and in the brief submitted, offered restitution and reduction of interest. That closes the incident.

[1, 3] The defense of usury, which involves forfeiture of interest and costs of suit, even if it were timely and properly pleaded, is not made out by the proofs. Mr. Nixon was hired to secure a lender, and, if successful, he was to receive the remuneration agreed upon. He was not and there that particular bargain ended. Under the new arrangement, and when Mr. Nixon himself advanced the money, there was no agreement between him and Mrs. Chenoweth that he should have a commission of 2 per cent. out of his loan. Such a bargain, executed, would be clearly usurious. In making the settlement, Mr. Nixon arbitrarily withheld $240 for his compensation, to which Mrs. Chenoweth, at the time, submitted. That this was the true situation was affirmed by Mrs. Chenoweth, as well on the stand as by her original answer, in which she asserted that "the charge of fee or commission was without any previous agreement, and was simply deducted from the proceeds of the mortgage loan by the said Horace F. Nixon." A corrupt bargain, to contravene the statute, is essential to sustain the plea of usury. Withholding of a part of the loan as a bonus, without a previous agreement to that effect, does not constitute usury. Howell v. Anten, 2 N. J. Eq. 44; Ware v. Thompson, 18 N. J. Eq. 66; Muir v. Newark, 18 N. J. Eq. 537; Auble v. Trimmer, 17 N. J. Eq. 242; Kase v. Bennett, 54 N. J. Eq. 97, 33 Atl. 248. The remedy for the wrongful detention is to correct the settlement, and not to forfeit the interest, if there was no contract to evade the statute. United States Mortgage Co. v. Sperry, 138 U. S. 313, 11 Sup. Ct. 321, 34 L. Ed. 968.

Mr. Nixon's subsequent success in placing the mortgage at 5 per cent., as he had promised to do, entitles him to his brokerage of one-half of 1 per cent., the maximum rate under the fifth section of "An act against usury." 4 Comp. St. 1910, p. 5706, § 7. It is insisted that the loan from Mr. Dunlap to the defendant was for a term of five years, and hence the charge of $240 was within the statute. I can find nothing in the record justifying this claim. The mortgage was drawn for one year, and there was no binding obligation to extend the time.

[2] Now, as to the pleadings: The defense of usury must be timely and strictly pleaded; otherwise, it will be indulged only to promote the equities of the cause. Richards v. Weingarten, 58 N. J. Eq. 206, 42 Atl. 739; Van-deveer v. Holcomb, 22 N. J. Eq. 555. The first answer, filed within time, on January 6, 1916, set up, as already stated, that the 2 per cent. was charged for services without previous agreement, and a deduction was prayed. After notice of motion to strike it out, an order was entered February 14th allowing an amendment. On February 24th, by way of counterclaim (?), the charge and deduction of $240 commission was again set up, substantially in the language of the original answer, but characterized as usury, and allowance was prayed. The cause came on for hearing on April 4th, when counsel associated with Mr. Nixon applied for a continuance and consented to a further amendment setting up usury in proper form. This consent was withdrawn the following day on the ground that it had been given under a misapprehension. At the final hearing the defendant filed an amended counterclaim, in form herein-after stated. This amendment will be permitted to stand as an answer to abate the principal debt, but not to plead the defense of usury. It is out of time. There is no order allowing it, and the consent to its filing, which was hastily given and promptly withdrawn, ought not to prejudice the complainant. Had the application to amend been made to the court, it would have been denied upon terms. Richards v. Weingarten, supra.

The amendment does not allege usury, as required by the rules of pleading. After setting up the facts and circumstances of making the loan, as hereinbefore related, the answer continues:

"And in making settlement therefor the said Horace F. Nixon deducted and retained from said principal sum the sum of $240, which these defendants by their acquiescence at that time agreed to pay to said Horace F. Nixon for the loan and use of said sum of $12,000 in addition to interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum upon the loan or forbearance thereof."

This is argumentative. It disclosed no corrupt bargain for the loan of the money, and is no more than an averment that in making the settlement Mr. Nixon retained $240 for his compensation, to which for the time being the defendant's attitude was passive. One of the four essential allegations of the defense of usury is that the contract for the loan of money was made between the parties, with the intent to violate or evade the statute against usury. Kase v. Bennett, supra. The further allegation:

"That the said bond or obligation, made upon the contract as aforesaid, between the said Horace F. Nixon and these defendants, for the loan of money, and the bond and mortgage set forth in the said bill of complaint, were given in pursuance of the agreement above set forth, with corrupt intent to violate and evade the statute against usury"

—was intended to supply another required averment, viz., that the bond and mortgage were given in pursuance of the corrupt intent that influenced the contract for the loan. This, too, is faulty, because it assimilates the infirmities of the previous insufficient allegation of a corrupt bargain upon which it is predicated. Combined, the allegations do not supply the deficiencies. In setting up a defense of usury in a suit in chancery, the defendant must in his answer, as in a plea of usury in an action at law, set out the particular facts and circumstances of the supposed usurious agreement, that the court may see that the agreement was in violation of the statute. Taylor v. Morris, 22 N. J. Eq. 606.

The complainant is entitled to a decree for the amount of principal, less $180 (the difference between the brokerage, charged and allowed), with interest at six per cent. to the date the complainant purchased the mortgage (September 27, 1912). He paid for it in three installments. Interest will be calculated at the same rate to the date of final payment, December 7, 1912, on the unpaid portions, and after that date at 5 per cent. Credit is to be given for all payments made on account of interest. Under the circumstances, no costs will be allowed. Mr. Nixon is the real prosecutor of the suit, upon whom the costs should fall, and, as the complainant has his guaranty, and has been paid his interest in full, an adjustment can readily be made.

(88 N. J. Eq. 612)

WARREN v. WARREN. (No. 29.)

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
Jan. 31, 1913.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE ~~€~~$21½—MARRIAGE SETTLEMENTS—EQUITIES ON SEPARATION.

A transfer of land to a wife paid for by husband, when both contemplated sharing its benefits by living together through life, must be presumed a settlement or gift, and complete estrangement, or even divorce, raises no new equity in favor of the husband.

Appeal from Court of Chancery.

Equitable action by William H. Warren against Cora B. Warren. Decree for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The following is the opinion of the Vice Chancellor:

"In the above-stated cause my conclusion is that the complainant has failed to establish his case, and that the bill must therefore be dismissed.

"The equitable principles applicable to the situation presented by the pleadings and proofs are well settled—so well settled that there was no dispute in regard to them in the argument of counsel.

"As to the facts, I think I may say that the evidence not only failed to rebut the presumption of a settlement or gift, but convinced my mind that there was a gift; that this was the common case where a man buys land and has it conveyed to his wife with the natural expectation that the settlement will be advantageous to both parties. When the relations of the man and his wife cease to be harmonious, when divorce or separation comes, the man finds himself disappointed in his expectations, and he very much regrets the disposition of property which he theretofore made. No doubt there are situations of this kind where there is hardship, and some future laws may provide for the readjustment of family settlements in case of divorce. Under our present system of laws the destruction of harmonious and confidential relations between the man and wife, their complete estrangement, and even divorce, create no new equity in favor of the husband with respect to land which he originally donated to his wife when both parties contemplated that their affectionate and confidential relations would endure throughout their lives, and that both would therefore share in the benefits of the donated property.

"I am disposing of this case without considering the origin of the money which paid for the land or some other questions of fact. I am assuming, for the purposes of this decision, that the full price of the land came from money which belonged to the husband alone, together with the rents which the land yielded through a course of years."

Ziegner & Lane, of Jersey City, for appellant. Lum, Tamblin & Olyer, of Newark, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. The decree appealed from will be affirmed for the reasons stated in the opinion filed in the court below by Vice Chancellor STEVENSON.

(283 Pa. 42)

In re BOWERS' ESTATE.

Appeal of PEOPLE'S TRUST CO. OF LANCASTER.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. July 17, 1918.)

WILLS §767—ADEMPTION—CHANGE OF REALTY TO PERSONALTY.

Where testator, owning realty and personalty, devised his estate in trust, to put "money" at interest and to lease realty and to pay over annual income to his daughter for life, and required trustees, on her request, to sell realty and pay from proceeds such sum as she might request, and, on her death, gave remaining estate to collaterals, and in his lifetime converted realty into securities, such securities passed as personalty, and could not be awarded daughter on her request, her interest therein being for life only.

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Lancaster County.

Petition by Mary Bowers for payment to her of a trust fund created by the will of Jacob Bowers, deceased. From a decree directing payment of principal of trust fund, the People's Trust Company of Lancaster, one of the testamentary trustees, appeals. Reversed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, WALLING, and SIMPSON, JJ.

William H. Keller, of Lancaster, for appellant. John E. Malone and William H. Keller, both of Lancaster, for appellee.

MOSCHZISKER, J. Jacob Bowers, a widower with one child, a daughter named Mary, died July 6, 1915, leaving a will dated March 4, 1913. Testator gave all his property in trust to place "the money" at interest, lease the real estate, and pay over the entire net income, each year, to Mary Bowers, during her life. He further provided that, if at any time this daughter should ask the trustees to sell real estate, they should do so, and pay her, out of the proceeds, such sum as she might in writing request, her receipt therefor to be a sufficient release. When testator's will was made, he possessed certain personal property, a farm, and another piece of real estate; on April 1, 1915, he sold this farm and invested the proceeds in securities valued at $14,839.29, which he owned at the time of his death. Letters testamentary were granted to Mary Bowers and the People's Trust Company of Lancaster, whose account showed a balance of $18,102.27, which was awarded to these executors as trustees under the will.

July 26, 1917, the trustees filed an account, showing a balance of principal amounting to $18,025.42. Thereupon Mary Bowers presented a petition to the Orphans' Court, setting forth that, under the provisions of her father's will, she had requested payment to her of the net purchase price of the farm sold by decedent during his life, and praying an award accordingly. The trust company answered, denying petitioner's right to the desired award; but, upon the adjudication of the trustees' account, the court below directed them to pay her the sum of $14,839.29, as principal derived from the sale of the farm. Exceptions to this order were dismissed, and the daughter's cotrustee appealed.

When the will before us was executed, the testator had personal as well as real estate; the trust which he created for the benefit of Mary Bowers embraces both species of property, and, at her death, "whatever estate remains" is to go to certain collateral legatees. He gave his daughter the right to consume principal invested in real estate, but made no such provision as to personal estate. The impelling reason for this distinction between realty and personalty is undisclosed; but the distinction exists, and must be adhered to as a material part of testator's scheme of distribution. When, in Mr. Bowers' lifetime, he sold his farm and invested the proceeds in securities, at his death the latter passed under his will as personal estate, and must be treated as such in all respects. The truth of this becomes plain when we consider the proposition suggested by counsel for appellant:

"Suppose the situation were reversed, and decedent had invested the personal property, which he owned at the time of making his will, in real estate, and then died; would any one contend that such real estate, so purchased, was not real estate for the purposes of his will, but was to be considered as if it still remained personal property?"

Clearly not, and no more can the fund here in question be treated as though it still remained real estate. The award under attack cannot be sustained, for it constitutes a plain departure from the terms of testator's will.

Decree reversed; costs to be paid out of the estate.

(Supreme Court of Vermont. Nov. 19, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶1178(6)—REVERSAL—ORDERING NEW TRIAL OF CERTAIN ISSUES ONLY.

Although, upon reversal for error which inheres in a single issue, the ends of justice are in general met by a new trial of that issue alone, the scope of retrial rests in the sound discretion of the appellate court.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶1221—REVERSAL—ORDERING NEW TRIAL OF CERTAIN ISSUES ONLY—ENLARGING REVERSAL.

Where, after a reversal and remand for new trial on a certain issue only, a petition is seasonably brought for enlargement of the reversal, the matter should be regulated by a flexible rule, and the rules governing petition for new trials in general do not necessarily obtain.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶1221—REVERSAL—RETRIAL OF CERTAIN ISSUES ONLY—ENLARGING REVERSAL.

Where a judgment for plaintiff in an action for malpractice was reversed and remanded upon the question of damages only, and the affidavit upon petition to enlarge reversal showed newly discovered evidence bearing upon important issues connected with the allowance of damages, held that the reversal should be enlarged and a retrial had without restrictions.

Action by R. N. Baldwin against J. H. Gaines. Judgment upon a verdict was rendered for plaintiff, and the defendant brings exceptions. Whereupon the case was reversed and remanded for new trial as to damages only (92 Vt. 61, 102 Atl. 338). Hearing upon petition for enlarging reversal and granting unrestricted retrial. Petition granted.

Argued before WATSON, C. J., and HASELTON, POWERS, and TAYLOR, JJ.

W. W. Reiriden, of Barton, and E. A. Cook, of Lyndonville, for petitioner.

Frank D. Thompson, of Barton, and J. Rolf Searles, of St. Johnsbury, for petitionee.

HASELTON, J. The case of Baldwin v. Gaines for malpractice was tried in the county court at the September term, 1916, and the plaintiff had judgment. The case came to this court on exceptions, and at our October term, 1917, the judgment was reversed as to damages, and the cause was remanded for a new trial on that question only. Baldwin v. Gaines, 92 Vt. 61, 102 Atl. 338.

We have here a petition for an unrestricted retrial. We are informed by the brief of the petitioner that the remanded case has been continued in county court pending the determination of this petition for an enlargement of the reversal.

[1] Until about nine years ago it was the practice on reversal and remand for prejudicial error to grant a new trial on all questions and issues. But during the time just mentioned it has been considered that where the error inheres in a single issue, the ends of justice are in general met by a new trial per Mills, 82 Vt. 489, 74 Atl. 108, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 128; Austin v. Langlois, 88 Vt. 104, 74 Atl. 489; Kennett v. Tudor, 85 Vt. 190, 81 Atl. 633; Griffin v. Boston & Maine Railroad, 87 Vt. 278, 89 Atl. 220; Green v. La Clair, 89 Vt. 346, 95 Atl. 499; Cross v. Passumpsic Fibre Leather Co., 90 Vt. 397, 98 Atl. 1010; Ryder v. Last Block Co., 91 Vt. 158, 99 Atl. 733; Adams v. Cook, 91 Vt. 281, 100 Atl. 42.

The practice has become the general rule, but the rule is to be applied with caution, with a view to the furtherance of justice, and whether or not it shall be applied is always a matter within the sound discretion of the court. Griffin v. Boston & Maine Railroad, 87 Vt. 278, 89 Atl. 220; Carpenter v. Central Vermont Ry. Co., 90 Vt. 85, 96 Atl. 373; 20 R. C. L. 222.

[2] At the time of a decision requiring a new trial on one issue, suggestions may be made by counsel to the effect that justice will be promoted by an unrestricted trial of all questions in the case. Griffin v. Boston & Maine Railroad, 87 Vt. 278, 89 Atl. 220.

It follows that where, as here, a petition is seasonably brought for the enlargement of a reversal, the rules governing petitions for new trials in general do not necessarily obtain.

The rule here should be somewhat as flexible as the rule that where a case comes before us on findings of facts, if a reversal is had, judgment will here be rendered such as the trial court should have rendered on the facts found. Reynolds v. Bean, 91 Vt. 247, 99 Atl. 1013; Phillips v. Cutler, 89 Vt. 233, 95 Atl. 487; Davis v. Davis' Estate, 48 Vt. 502; Smith v. Hill, 45 Vt. 90, 12 Am. Rep. 189.

[3] The defendant to this petition resided in Irasburg and was injured in an automobile accident at Newport. He suffered a fracture of the right femur or thigh bone. The petitioner, Dr. Gaines, was one of the physicians who set the bone, and he attended Baldwin as his surgeon at Newport for about three weeks, when the patient was removed to his home in Irasburg. Dr. Templeton, of Irasburg, was the family physician of the Baldwins, and one of the issues in the case was whether after the removal of Baldwin to Irasburg the latter was under the care of Dr. Templeton or of Dr. Gaines as attending physician and surgeon.

Upon this important question the affidavits of newly discovered evidence attached to the petition have a very considerable bearing. The affidavits also have some bearing upon the question of whether or not the deformity in Mr. Baldwin's right leg (it is now about 2¼ inches shorter than the other) resulted from his own imprudence. If this were a petition to open litigation that has been ended we might not be able to say that the affidavits are sufficient for that purpose. And we might have difficulty in holding that the affidavits of diligence are specific enough. Gilfillan v. Gilfillan's Estate, 90 Vt. 94, 96 Atl. 704; Usher v. Allen, 89 Vt. 545, 95 Atl. 809; Willard v. Norcross, 86 Vt. 426, 85 Atl. 904; Ploof v. Putnam, 83 Vt. 494, 76 Atl. 145; Flint v. Holman, 82 Vt. 513, 74 Atl. 232; Hemmenway v. Lincoln, 82 Vt. 465, 73 Atl. 1073; Lucia v. State, 77 Vt. 279, 59 Atl. 1016; May v. State, 77 Vt. 330, 60 Atl. 1.

But here the question is not whether there shall be a new trial, but relates to the scope of such trial. Much of the newly discovered evidence will necessarily be admissible on the question of damages, for the petitioner can be held liable only for injuries attributable to his fault. Mullin v. Flanders, 73 Vt. 95, 50 Atl. 813; Hathorn v. Richmond, 48 Vt. 557; Wilmot v. Howard, 39 Vt. 447, 94 Am. Dec. 838.

We think it will subserve the ends of justice, and will consist with the rules governing new trials in general, to enlarge the reversal upon the showing made and order a new trial without restrictions. Having reached this conclusion, we purposely refrain from a detailed comment upon the affidavits, and from expressing an opinion as to the probable result of an unrestricted new trial, as we ordinarily do when we have under consideration a petition for a new trial which looks to the renewal of litigation once ended.

Petition granted.

(92 Vt. 486)

LARROW v. MARTELL et al.

(Supreme Court of Vermont. Windham. Nov. 8, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §706(8)—AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENTS—"UNAVOIDABLE ACCIDENT."

In an action for injuries sustained by being struck by defendant's automobile, an instruction that plaintiff had the burden of showing defendant's negligence, sufficiently submitted the defense of "unavoidable accident," which as to a defendant is an accident occurring without any approximate negligence on his part.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Unavoidable Accident.]

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS §706(5)—AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENTS—EVIDENCE.

In action for injuries sustained by being struck by an automobile at a street intersection, evidence held to warrant a finding that the acts of defendant were willful and malicious.

Exceptions from Windham County Court; Zed S. Stanton, Judge.

Action by Frank A. Larrow against George Martell and another. Verdict for plaintiff, and defendant Martell alone excepts. Affirmed.

Argued before WATSON, C. J., and HASELTON, POWERS, TAYLOR, and MILES, JJ.

Robert C. Bacon, of Brattleboro, for plaintiff.

Herbert G. Barber and Frank E. Barber, both of Brattleboro, for defendant.

WATSON, C. J. This is an action of tort to recover for injuries to person and damages to property. During the course of the trial the case was discontinued as to defendant Cobb, and we hereinafter use the word "defendant" as referring to Martell only. The verdict was for the plaintiff. The case is here on defendant's exceptions.

The act of defendant of which complaint is made was done within the limits of the incorporated village of Brattleboro, and at the intersection of Frost, Flat, and Elm streets, which intersection makes four corners, though not all right-angled. Elm street runs northerly and southerly, extending each way beyond such intersection. At approximately right angles therewith is Flat street, running easterly, and Frost street, running westerly. At the time in question the plaintiff was driving a horse and road cart westerly on Flat street, intending to make a left-about turn within the four corners; and the defendant was operating an automobile on Elm street, going northerly toward and over the crossing of this intersection. When the plaintiff was within the four corners, the exact place being in dispute, the automobile operated by the defendant ran against the plaintiff's cart, resulting in the damage to it, and in the injuries to the plaintiff, complained of. No question as to contributory negligence by the plaintiff is presented, the exceptions taken to the charge of the court upon that branch of the case not being briefed.

Defendant excepted to the failure of the court to instruct the jury that if this was an unavoidable accident—that is, if it was what is known "as a pure and simple accident"—the plaintiff could not recover, even though he received an injury; and in his brief defendant says the court properly instructed the jury on the questions of negligence and contributory negligence as far as it went, but that it did not go far enough, for the law in regard to unavoidable accident, and its application to and effect upon the rights of the parties, were not explained.

To be an unavoidable accident as to the defendant, it must have occurred without any proximate negligence on his part. Exclusive of contributory evidence of the plaintiff, the test of liability is not whether the injury was accidental, but whether the defendant was at fault. Vincent v. Stinehour, 7 Vt. 62, 29 Am. Dec. 145; Judd v. Ballard, 66 Vt. 668, 30 Atl. 96. The words "mere accident" and "pure accident" have been held to exclude the idea of negligence (Ullman v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 112 Wis. 150, 88 N. W. 41, 88 Am. St. Rep. 949), and we think the words "pure and simple accident" are to be understood as having the same significance.

It appeared that the automobile was provided with a suitable horn for signaling, but the defendant did not give any signal with it, nor with any other device for signaling, when approaching the crossing of the intersection of streets where the collision took place.

The plaintiff's evidence tended to show that he came down on the north side of Flat street, and was west of the center line of Elm street and north of the center line of Flat street when struck by the automobile; that when the car first came in sight of the plaintiff (and inferentially when the plaintiff's team first came in sight of the defendant) the car was 75 or 80 feet away, was running at a rate of speed from 20 to 30 or 35 miles an hour, and did not slacken in speed before it collided with the plaintiff's cart; that, when the car struck plaintiff's team, his horse was standing still or just moving westerly; that, seeing the car coming, the plaintiff raised his left hand and holloed to defendant, and went to gather up his reins to move along, but before he could get his reins gathered up the car struck him; and that, going northerly, as was the defendant, there was ample room for the car to pass on the right-hand (east) side of plaintiff's team, there being a clear space of between 20 and 25 feet, and still be within the limits of Elm street, to say nothing of the further room resulting from the intersection of Flat street.

The defendant's evidence tended to show that the place of collision was practically in the center of the intersection of Flat and Elm streets, on the east side of the latter; that he was running the car on the east (his right-hand) side of Elm street; that as he came past the building on the corner of Elm street (being the southwest corner of Flat street) he saw the plaintiff just leaving the northwest corner of Flat street (going west), whereupon defendant turned the car to the right, and, within a second or two, the plaintiff was struck by the left side of the car; that, on seeing the plaintiff, the defendant slowed down the car as much as he could; that in approaching the crossing, instead of using the horn, he relied upon the noise made by the car as a means of signaling, the muffler cut-out being open and the noise such that it could be heard for a long distance away. Some of the defendant's evidence, including his own testimony, tended to show that in coming along Elm street, and to the time of the collision, the automobile was not running at a rate of speed exceeding 10 miles an hour, and that plaintiff's horse was going at the rate of 20 miles an hour, while some of his evidence tended to show that the car was running at a speed not exceeding 15 miles an hour at the time of the collision, and that plaintiff's team was then standing still, the plaintiff holloing and his arms outstretched. A written statement of the accident, signed by defendant within a week after its occurrence, was put in evidence, in which he stated that he was driving the automobile about 20 miles an hour.

[1] The court charged the jury that the burden of proof was with the plaintiff, and if they found on all the evidence that on the occasion in question, while the defendant was proceeding over Elm street immediately up to, and at the point of, the accident, he used the care and prudence of a prudent man, and therefore was not negligent, their verdict must be for the defendant. As before observed, no fault is found with this part of the charge. It is said, however, that the court should have gone further and instructed the jury with reference to the law of unavoidable accidents. But the law of such accidents was, as to the defendant, involved in the instruction given, that in order to recover the plaintiff must show negligence on the part of the defendant, and, failing this, the verdict must be for the defendant. This eliminates the possibility of a recovery if the jury should find an unavoidable accident, and the exception is without merit. In Sowles v. Moore, 65 Vt. 322, 26 Atl. 629, 21 L. R. A. 723, the plaintiff sought to recover the value of a pair of horses which were drowned in Lake Champlain, through the alleged negligence of the defendants in not properly guarding an opening in the lake where they had been taking ice near a line of public travel. The plaintiff's evidence tended to show that the horses, when being driven on the lake, became frightened, escaped from the driver, and ran into the opening, which was but little guarded. On plaintiff's exception to the charge, the court said the question whether the horses were in such fright and running at such speed that they would have been turned from their course by such guards as reasonably prudent men would have erected was a material question of fact for the jury to decide before they could say whether defendants' negligence in respect to the guard was the cause of the casualty, and that both questions were involved in the instruction that the plaintiff must make out "that the horses were drowned by reason of the failure of the defendants to properly guard the opening." The judgment was affirmed. In the case of Flanagan v. Chicago City Ry. Co., 243 Ill. 456, 90 N. E. 688, the question here presented was raised by the court's refusal to charge as requested, and a similar holding was had.

[2] Exception was taken to the granting of the motion for a certified execution, on the ground, in short, that the evidence did not warrant the finding by the court that—"The cause of action arose from the willful and malicious act of the defendant, and for willful and malicious injuries to the person and property of the plaintiff, and defendant ought to be confined in close jail."

It is enough to say that the evidence particularly noticed above, if believed in its most favorable light to the plaintiff, afforded a sufficient basis for the finding. Whether the evidence should be so believed was a matter resting wholly with the trial court, and its decision, based upon the finding of such facts, is not revisable here. Melendy v. Spaulding, 54 Vt. 517; Sheeran v. Rockwood, 67 Vt. 82, 30 Atl. 689; Sartwell v. Sowles, 72 Vt. 270, 48 Atl. 11, 82 Am. St. Rep. 943.

Judgment affirmed.

(82 Vt. 442)

WALKER v. WALKER (two cases).

(Supreme Court of Vermont. Windsor.
Nov. 11, 1918.)

1. DIVORCE \Leftrightarrow 129(17) — ADULTERY — EVIDENCE.

In a suit for divorce by a wife against her husband, wherein the husband filed a cross-bill, evidence held to support a finding of adultery on the part of the wife.

2. DIVORCE \Leftrightarrow 104 — PLEADINGS — AMENDMENT.

In a suit by a wife for divorce on the ground of refusal to support, wherein her husband filed a cross-bill, it was not error to refuse to permit the wife at the close of the evidence to amend her petition so that it would set up intolerable severity.

3. DIVORCE \Leftrightarrow 104 — DEFENSES — RECRIMINATION — AMENDMENT.

In a suit for divorce by a wife on the ground of nonsupport, wherein the husband filed a cross-bill based on adultery, the wife might defend against her husband's petition by way of recrimination without an amendment of pleadings.

4. DIVORCE \Leftrightarrow 54 — DEFENSES — ADULTERY.

Adultery committed by a wife bars a suit by her for divorce on any ground.

Exceptions from Windsor County Court; Frank L. Fish, Judge.

Suit by Olivette C. Walker against Grover C. Walker for divorce, with cross-bill by defendant against plaintiff. A decree was rendered, granting a divorce to Grover C. Walker and dismissing the petition of Olivette C. Walker, and the latter excepts. Affirmed.

Argued before WATSON, C. J., and HASELTON, POWERS, TAYLOR, and MILES, JJ.

Herbert H. Blanchard and Herbert G. Tupper, both of Springfield, for Grover C. Walker.

Herbert G. Barber, Frank E. Barber, and C. Menzies Miller, all of Brattleboro, for Olivette C. Walker.

HASELTON, J. [1] We have here two petitions for divorce tried together in county court and heard together here. Olivette C. Walker petitioned for a divorce from her husband, Grover C. Walker, on the ground of refusal to support. Her petition was denied. Grover C. asked for a divorce from his wife, Olivette C., on the ground of adultery. His petition was granted. Olivette C. brings exceptions. She claims, as the vital question in the cases, that the testimony was not sufficient in law to support the finding by the court of adultery on her part. The testimony is referred to, and it tended to show the following facts: Mr. and Mrs. Walker lived in Springfield in this state. About the latter part of September, 1916, Mrs. Walker became acquainted with one Johnson. Thereafter she went to dances with him at Bellows Falls, Springfield, and Claremont. She ran around with Johnson considerably, told her husband that she hated him and liked Johnson, and that if she felt like going around with Johnson she would. March 17, 1917, Mrs. Walker and Johnson attended a dance at Bellows Falls. From the dance hall they went to the Hotel Rockingham and spent the night in the same room, containing only one bed. To bring about this opportunity they registered as man and wife, and the evidence tended to show that both understood how they were registered. Not only did they register as man and wife, but they registered under an assumed name. These facts were amply sufficient as circumstantial evidence to support a finding of adultery. Taft v. Taft, 80 Vt. 256, 67 Atl. 703, 130 Am. St. Rep. 984, 12 Ann. Cas. 959; Lewis v. Roby, 79 Vt. 487, 65 Atl. 524, 118 Am. St. Rep. 984; Lindley v. Lindley, 68 Vt. 421, 35 Atl. 349; State v. North, 90 Vt. 125, 128, 129, 96 Atl. 702; State v. Brink, 68 Vt. 669, 35 Atl. 492.

Mrs. Walker and Johnson both testified, and both admitted staying together in the same bedroom at the hotel on the night of March 17, 1917, but both denied having sexual intercourse. They testified that Johnson was taken suddenly ill at the dance in question, and was in great pain, and that thereupon they went to the hotel and registered and occupied the same bedroom during the night, she making cold applications upon him throughout the night as for appendicitis, upon his statement to her that such was his trouble. He testified that he told her he was suffering from appendicitis, but on trial he testified that that was not so, but that he was suffering from stricture following gonorrhea. Evidence as introduced ending to show the improbability of sexual intercourse if his condition was as he claimed it to have been. No one at the hotel was informed of his alleged suffering, no doctor was called. The next morning, without waiting for breakfast, they took the train for Springfield, arriving there at noon or a little after. The following day, which according to the calendar was Monday, Johnson did a little work, but on the Friday following he went to a hospital in Rutland and was there operated upon. He testified that the operation was for stricture, and was made by an incision through the bladder. After the operation, Mrs. Walker, his companion of the night in question, went to Rutland to be with him, and stayed there three days, visiting him much as a friend, but having nothing to do with nursing him.

Counsel for Mrs. Walker claimed that the testimony of Mrs. Walker and Johnson was such that there was really no conflict in the evidence, and no ground for the finding of adultery. But it is no new thing for people charged with crime to deny it, and to invent circumstances to make their denial probable. It was for the court to weigh all the evidence together, and we are convinced and hold that the whole evidence so taken warranted the finding of the trial court as to adultery on the part of Mrs. Walker.

[2] Near the close of all the evidence, counsel for Mrs. Walker moved to be allowed to amend her petition so that it would set up intolerable severity as a ground for divorce. After some discussion the court declined to permit the amendment at the stage to which the cases had progressed. In so ruling the court did not abuse its discretion. Upon this question there is no occasion to cite authorities.

[3] Without amendment of the pleadings it was, however, open to Mrs. Walker to defend against her husband's petition by way of recrimination. Hemenway v. Hemenway, 65 Vt. 623, 27 Atl. 609; Tillison v. Tillison, 63 Vt. 411, 416, 417, 22 Atl. 531; Shackett v. Shackett, 49 Vt. 145.

[4] And without condonation, of which there is no suggestion, the adultery found to have been committed by Mrs. Walker was a bar to her having a divorce on any ground. Shackett v. Shackett, 49 Vt. 196, 197.

We have considered all the exceptions relied on by the excepting party.

The decree dismissing the petition of Olivette C. Walker is affirmed. The decree granting the petition of Grover C. Walker is affirmed.

(79 N. H. 74)

COBB v. MORRISON.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Merrimack. Oct. 1, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶889(3)—REVIEW—NECESSITY OF SPECIAL PLEA.

Where release was introduced in evidence, and issue as to whether it was a bar to suit was fully tried, reviewing court will not interfere, although a special plea setting up release was necessary.

2. ACTION ON THE CASE ¶5—UNLAWFUL INTERFERENCE WITH ELECTION—EVIDENCE.

In case to recover for alleged unlawful interference by defendant member of school board with plaintiff's re-election as school superintendent, evidence held insufficient to show interference by defendant after the date when the parties had a settlement.

3. RELEASE ¶57(2)—FRAUD IN PROCURING—EVIDENCE.

In the absence of evidence that plaintiff relied on defendant's silence, or that he would not have signed a release if there had been a full disclosure of the facts and circumstances, the charge of fraud in obtaining the release cannot be sustained.

4. RELEASE ¶83—FROM CONSUMMATED ACTS—SUBSEQUENT ACTS INCLUDED.

A release from liability for acts theretofore done will bar suit for injuries due to effect of such conduct, although effect did not become manifest until a later date.

Transferred from Superior Court, Merrimack County; Sawyer, Judge.

Action by Ernest Cobb against Obe G. Morrison. Defendant's motion for nonsuit, at close of plaintiff's evidence, was granted. Case transferred on plaintiff's exception. Exception overruled.

Robert W. Upton and Joseph W. Worthen, both of Concord, for plaintiff. Frank P. Tilton, of Laconia, and Martin & Howe, of Concord, for defendant.

PEASLEE, J. The plaintiff was superintendent of schools for the supervisory district consisting of the towns of Tilton, Northfield, and Belmont, and the defendant was a member of the school board of the Tilton-Northfield union district, which is included in the supervisory district. The evidence tended to prove that the defendant was opposed to supervision generally, and particularly to the plaintiff's work, and that the defendant, prior to June 11, 1910, had been active in opposing the plaintiff's wishes, and in inducing other members of the school boards to vote against the plaintiff's re-election.

The plaintiff employed counsel to obtain redress for the defendant's alleged infringement of the plaintiff's rights in the premises, a suit was threatened, and on June 11th parties and their counsel met to consider their differences. After some discussion they came to an agreement and the plaintiff gave the following release:

"Tilton, N. H., June 11, 1910.

"All matters of discussion between Obe G. Morrison and myself having been amicably adjusted, I hereby agree to refrain from bringing any action against said Morrison for slander or other matters that have occurred before this date, and will not be a party to any suit against him concerning school matters in the town of Tilton and Northfield, N. H., arising before this date."

He now claims that this release is not a bar to the present suit for several reasons:

[1] I. The release was not pleaded. There is no occasion to inquire whether a special plea setting up the release was necessary at common law. The release appeared in evidence, the plaintiff had full opportunity to answer it, if he could, and he attempted to do so. The issue was fully tried. If it appears to the trial court that justice and convenience require the filing of a special plea, it can be done now.

[2] II. It is claimed that, after the settlement on June 11, the defendant interfered with the plaintiff's attempt to be re-elected on June 17, 1910. There is no substantial evidence of such interference. The claim is that the defendant then went to Belmont in company with one Sanborn, and induced committeemen of that town to vote against the plaintiff. The defendant denied going to Belmont after June 11, except upon one occasion, when at the close of a day's business he and Sanborn went there upon a trip which did not include any visit to the committeemen claimed to have been influenced. A witness testified to seeing the defendant and Sanborn "in the village of East Tilton just before they crossed the bridge leading into Belmont," that this was "the very first of June," that as he remembered it was after the written resignation, and that he was unable to state the time of day, but as between forenoon and afternoon was of the impression it was the former. There was no other evidence on the question. The utmost that can be said is that the defendant was shown to be on a road in Tilton leading to Belmont at the time in question. Whether he then went to Belmont, or stopped short of there, or turned off on a side road, is left wholly to conjecture.

[3] III. It is said that the release was obtained by fraud, in that the defendant did not disclose to the plaintiff the fact that influence had theretofore been brought to bear upon the committeemen. The parties were dealing at arm's length. Each was represented by counsel, and the subject of having seen other committeemen was not mentioned. There was no representation by the defendant, either express or implied, that he was disclosing to the plaintiff the full extent of the wrong done, in order that the plaintiff might correctly estimate his damages. The extent of the defendant's activities does not appear to have been discussed. The point of the negotiations seems to have been that the defendant had been active against the plaintiff, and was to retire from the whole affair. There is no suggestion in the evidence that the plaintiff relied upon the defendant's silence and was deceived by it. The plaintiff did not testify to any reliance whatever upon what the defendant said, or upon his silence, nor that the release would not have been given if there had been a full disclosure. In the absence of some evidence of such facts, the charge of fraud in obtaining the release cannot be sustained. Connelly v. Brown, 73 N. H. 193, 60 Atl. 750, and cases cited.

[4] IV. The damage alleged not accruing until after the settlement was made, it is argued that the cause of action did not then exist, and that therefore it was not the intent to bar it by the release. The contention does not require extended consideration. The evident purpose of the writing was to release all liability for acts theretofore done. Whether a cause of action had then accrued is immaterial. The argument that the defendant's interference had not then been consummated, so far as action on his part was concerned, is not supported by the evidence. On the testimony, his interference was then a thing of the past. The effect of this conduct upon others might be manifested at a later date, but the release affords no evidence of an intent to reserve the right to recover for past wrongs which might cause future loss.

The nonsuit was properly ordered.

Exception overruled.

(30 N. J. Eq. 331)

COLE v. COLE. (No. 42/241.)

(Court of Chancery of New Jersey. Sept. 5, 1918.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

HABEAS CORPUS ~~—~~99(3)—CUSTODY OF CHILD
—GRANT TO STRANGER.

The court may, in determining the custody of infant children after divorce, award the custody to a stranger if circumstances of weight and importance connected with the welfare of child exist to overbear the strict legal rights of the parents.

Habeas corpus by Hulda A. Cole against Obediah S. Cole, for custody of a child, Winifred Cole. Decree awarding the custody of the infant to her aunt.

John P. Manning, of Newark, for complainant.

Charles M. Mason, of Newark, for defendant.

LANE, V. C. After I had determined that cross-petitioner was entitled to a decree for divorce on the ground of adultery, and had awarded the custody of the infant child, Winifred, to the father (complainant not appearing upon the hearing), application was made to open the proofs, and I heard further testimony bearing upon the permanent custody of the child. The child was brought before me as if upon habeas corpus in aid of the exercise by this court of its general jurisdiction as parens patriæ. The father lives with his mother, a widow of upwards of 50 years of age. The child, a girl of 5, has been in the custody of an aunt, a sister of the mother, for a considerable space of time. The mother desires that the child should remain with the aunt, the father that she should be given to him, so that she may be brought up by his mother.

For reasons which I announced orally at the conclusion of the hearing, and which I will not reiterate, I reached the conclusion that the welfare of the child required that it should, at this time, be left with the aunt. The question was then raised as to the power of the court to award the custody of the child to the aunt, the father being anxious to take it.

The statute provides that after a decree for divorce, the court may make such order touching the care, custody, and maintenance of the children as the circumstances of the parties, and the nature of the case, shall render fit, reasonable, and just. Section 25, Divorce Act, 2 Comp. St. 1910, p. 2035. An Act Concerning Infants, § 9 (arbitrary section 21, 2 Comp. Stat. p. 2810), provides that in making an order or decree relative to the custody of children, the rights of both parents, in the absence of misconduct, shall be held to be equal, and the happiness and welfare of the children shall determine the custody or possession. In Richards v. Collins (1889) 45 N. J. Eq. 283, 17 Atl. 831, 14 Am. St. Rep. 728, it was held that while the parents had the strict legal right, the Court of Chancery may, in the exercise of its inherent jurisdiction, permanently fix the status of infants, even in disregard of the strict legal rights of parents, where the welfare of the infants requires it.

This case is important because many of the circumstances which induced the court to award the custody of the child to a stranger are present in the instant case. Richards v. Collins has been uniformly cited with approval.

In the matter of Cunningham's Case, 61 N. J. Eq. 454, 48 Atl. 391, Vice Chancellor Stevens refused to award to the mother the custody of a 16 year old child as against the House of the Good Shepherd, although that institution had no legal authority to hold the child. Vice Chancellor Leaming, in Kopinski v. Richardson, 94 Atl. 32, after quoting from Richards v. Collins, supra, said:

"It will thus be seen that a child cannot be lawfully regarded as a mere inanimate chattel which must be restored to the lawful owner in all circumstances. Like the parent, the child has rights, and the strict legal rights of a father, as such, can only be enforced in this court with proper regard to the best interest of the child."

Vice Chancellor Stevenson, in Re Flynn, 87 N. J. Eq. 413, quoted from Richards v. Collins, at page 416, 100 Atl. 861, 863.

The considerations which ought to influence the court are referred to in the cases above cited, and in Giffen v. Gascoigne, 60 N. J. Eq. 256, 47 Atl. 25, and Titus v. McGloskey, 67 N. J. Eq. 709, 63 Atl. 244. Giving all due consideration to the legal right of the parents, and to the rule that that right will be recognized, unless circumstances of weight and importance connected with the welfare of the child exist to overbear it, and that it is not sufficient that greater material benefits will be secured by the child in the custody of a stranger, I am still of the opinion that the custody of the child at this time should be committed to the aunt, and will advise an order to that effect. I think that the fact that the mother desires the child left in the custody of the aunt is entitled to some consideration.

Vice Chancellor Stevens declined to pass upon a similar question because not necessary in Cunningham's Case.

The order to be made will provide for the right of visitation by the father and the grandmother at certain intervals, for visits by the child to the father and grandmother, and will direct and enjoin all of the parties hereto, including the father, the grandmother, the aunt and the mother, not to take, or permit to be taken, the child out of the jurisdiction of this court without an order of this court first obtained. The order will be so drafted that a disobedience of it will constitute a crime committed within this state, so that any person guilty may be extradited, and counsel drawing the order should have regard to the case of State v. Dudley, 89 N. J. Law, 42, 97 Atl. 772, and to the form in which the statutes providing for the crime of desertion are drawn. If the record does not show that the aunt is a formal party to the proceedings, it should be perfected. This may be done, if not already done, by the award of a writ of habeas corpus, directed to her, her return thereto, and traverse by the husband and a consolidation of the divorce case and of the habeas corpus proceedings for trial.

Settle decree and order on three days' notice.

The order will also reserve the right to any party to apply for a modification at any time.

(88 N. J. Eq. 906)

BOWERS v. BOWERS. (No. 8.)

(Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey.
Jan. 31, 1918.)

DIVORCE — 129(16) — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY — ADULTERY.

Evidence of defendant's conduct with co-respondent held sufficient to sustain decree of divorce on ground of adultery.

Appeal from Court of Chancery.

Action for divorce by Jessie Louise Bowers against John O. Bowers. Decree for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Decree affirmed.

The following is the opinion of the Vice Chancellor:

"This is an action for divorce on the ground of adultery. While there was no direct proof of the commission of the offense, the testimony satisfied me that the defendant and co-respondent had both the inclination and the opportunity to commit the act, and on the conclusion of the hearing I announced that I was satisfied of their guilt and would advise a decree for the petitioner.

"The parties were married on March 17, 1892, and for six years prior to the filing of the petition they had resided in Metuchen, Middlesex county, where defendant conducted a garage business. Petitioner is about 53 years old and the defendant is about 4 years younger. The co-respondent, Mrs. Waite, has been an acquaintance of theirs for some years, and in June, 1915, she moved to 162 Chadwick avenue, Newark. Petitioner first noticed an intimacy between him and Mrs. Waite in October, 1913. In July, 1914, she told her husband, who had been staying out at night until 2, 3, or 4 o'clock in the morning, that he would have to give her up or give up Mrs. Waite, to which he made no reply. That same night she spoke to Mrs. Waite, telling her she had broken up her home, to which Mrs. Waite replied, 'Oh, yes; I believe Leonard (her son) had something to say about that this afternoon;' and added, 'You go down the block and go home and mind your own business.' After this defendant neglected petitioner, left her alone night after night, even when she was ill, and never took her riding in his automobile, and they did not speak to each other except when absolutely necessary, and he showed no affection for her, and, although he paid the household bills, he refused to give her any money. His excuse is that if he gave her money she would spend it in employing detectives to get evidence against him.

"A few days after petitioner had spoken to defendant and Mrs. Waite about their relations, she again spoke to her husband on the subject, and he told her, 'You can have anything you like or you ask for, but I will go with any woman I damn please.'

"Since March, 1914, petitioner and defendant have not cohabited and have occupied separate rooms. And while Mrs. Waite lived in Metuchen defendant occasionally took meals at her home, and after her removal to Newark he was a very frequent visitor to her home, calling there three or four times a week, apparently driving from Metuchen to Newark in his car. He usually arrived late at night and left very early in the morning, leaving usually from 1 to 4 a. m. During this time people living across the street saw him hugging and kissing Mrs. Waite while she was dressed only in her nightgown, or in nightgown and some wrap over it. Petitioner herself saw some of this conduct while boarding opposite Mrs. Waite's for a few days in November, 1915. On December 7, 1915, petitioner closed her home in Metuchen and moved to 161 Chadwick avenue, opposite Mrs. Waite's, where she obtained board with a Mrs. Kratzig, for the purpose of obtaining what evidence she could of her husband's visits to Mrs. Waite's, and she remained there about three months, and saw her husband leaving the Waite house nearly every morning and arriving there nearly every evening. She and others saw defendant and Mrs. Waite out riding in the automobile at late hours of the night or in the early hours of the morning. They saw the affectionate greetings exchanged between them when he left in the morning. Mrs. Waite was seen to put her arms around him and kiss him while they were sitting in the front room of her home, and Mrs. Waite taunted and laughed at Mrs. Bowers when she met her on the street. Defendant admits calling at Mrs. Waite's frequently after her removal to Newark, at late hours of the night, and leaving at early hours in the morning. He states that the calls were made because he and Mrs. Waite's 20 year old son were working together on an engineering course in some correspondence school; and when petitioner closed their home he began to board with Mrs. Waite, and is still boarding with her, because he claims there is not a suitable place in Metuchen, where he carries on business, in which he could board; but the testimony shows that this is not true. Defendant and Mrs. Waite deny that any illicit relations exist between them; they claim Mrs. Bowers is unreasonably jealous and is of a nagging disposition. She impressed me as a very mild, respectable woman, saddened by the trouble that had come upon her and by the breaking up of her home; and her appearance and conduct upon the witness stand, and the manner in which she gave her evidence, were in marked contrast to the brazen, cynical, and indifferent conduct and manner of the defendant and Mrs. Waite.

In fact, the defendant seemed to realize the unpleasant position in which he was placed much more than Mrs. Waite did, who treated the offense with which she was charged in the lightest possible manner. A sample of her denial is shown by the following extract from her testimony when being examined by counsel for defendant: 'Did he ever kiss you? A. No, sir; when that happens, I want to be alone, not with an audience.' Again, on cross-examination, she stated defendant informed her that she had been named as correspondent in this case when he asked for board, and then: 'Q. Notwithstanding that he acquainted you with the fact that you were openly charged as the correspondent in this case, you nevertheless permitted the doors of your home to be opened to him? A. Surely. Q. The mere fact that you were charged as a correspondent in this case of record, you opened the doors of your home and said there is nothing there from which the public can gather anything? A. No. Q. Is that the only answer you can give me? A. Yes.'

"I cannot believe an innocent woman would act or testify as Mrs. Waite has done in this case. The excuse offered by the defendant for boarding with her, even while this case has been pending and the hearing held, is so flimsy that it cannot be believed. I am convinced defendant and Mrs. Waite committed the offense charged, and that petitioner has shown herself entitled to a decree."

Russell Watson, of New Brunswick, for appellant. A. C. Streitwolf, of New Brunswick, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. The decree appealed from will be affirmed for the reasons stated in the opinion filed in the court below by Vice Chancellor FOSTER.

HARLOW et al. v. WELD. (No. 432.)

(Supreme Court of Rhode Island. Nov. 21, 1918.)

WILLS §-886(1) — CONSTRUCTION — TRUSTS — TERMINATION.

Though a will directs that the property shall be kept together until the death of every annuitant, the trust might be terminated in part and the remainder of the estate distributed on the consent of all living annuitants, upon retaining a sufficient amount to secure the payment of the annuities, in view of the intent of the testator as exhibited by the will as a whole.

Certified Questions from Superior Court, Newport County.

Suit by J. Edwards Harlow, trustee, and others, against Mary Weld, for the construction of the will of William G. Weld, deceased. On certified questions. Questions answered.

Sheffield & Harvey, of Newport, for complainants.

Charles H. Koehne, Jr., of Newport, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The trustees under the will of William G. Weld, late of Newport, R. I., together with all of the living beneficiaries thereunder, except the defendant, who is the residuary devisee of the corpus of the trust estate, have joined as complainants in a bill for construction of certain parts of the will, and for instructions to the trustees as to the disposition of the corpus of the trust fund.

The will and first codicil, after giving certain specific bequests and legacies, vest in trustees all of the residuary estate, and after providing for the use and occupation of certain dwelling houses, and for the care and upkeep thereof, direct the payment by the trustees of certain annual sums, amounting in the aggregate to $5,500, to certain persons named in the will and to the survivors of them until the death of the last survivor.

The will then provides as follows:

"Fifth. I direct my trustees to pay over, after deducting all charges, annuities, and gifts, the balance of the net income of all of my estate, in quarterly payments, to my wife, Caroline L. Weld; on the event of her death or second marriage, I direct my trustees to pay over the whole income (except as before disposed of) to my last son, Charles Goddard Weld (after the death of my wife or second marriage). I repeat that all, all the income must be paid over to Charles G. Weld, as long as he shall live; on the death of this last son, then, the trustees, or their successors, must hand over the entire estate, in whatever it may consist of, to any grandchildren of mine, that may be born and living after date of this will. Should there be no grandchild living after the death of my wife and my only son, then the trustees will hand over my entire estate, as it then exists, to any great-grandchildren there may be of mine," etc.

The said will also provides:

"I give my trustees unlimited powers, but none of the principal of this estate is to be sold or exchanged unless par is obtained for the railroad bonds, but (with the exception of the gifts outright) is to be kept together, until after the death of every individual who is named as an annuitant in this will."

It appears that the said Charles G. Weld died before his mother, June 18, 1911; that Caroline L. Weld, widow of the testator, did not remarry and died April 14, 1918; that the defendant, Mary Weld, is the granddaughter and only surviving grandchild of the testator, and is the person entitled to take under the provisions of the "fifth" clause above quoted.

The prayer of the bill asks for instructions as follows:

"(3) That your honors will construe and determine the true intent and meaning of the said provisions of the said will of William G. Weld, and may instruct and direct your orators, as trustees under said will, as to their duties with reference to the said residuary estate and the times when and to whom they shall pay over the same.

"(4) And if it shall be the direction of your honors that your orators should set aside a sufficient fund to provide for the payment of the said annuities aggregating $5,500 per annum, before distributing the balance of the said residuary estate, that your honors will determine the securities and the amount thereof that should be so reserved, and direct and instruct your orators with respect to the same."

These questions as to the construction of the will and the powers and duties of the trustees arise from an apparent inconsistency between the direction contained in the "fifth" clause above quoted, viz., "the trustees, or their successors, must hand over the entire estate, in whatever it may consist of, to any grandchildren of mine, that may be born and living after date of this will," and the direction, as to the principal of the estate, contained in the last clause quoted, viz., "but (with the exception of the gifts outright) is to be kept together, until after the death of every individual who is named as an annuitant in this will."

The above-quoted clause was before this court for construction as to the powers of the trustees to sell and to invest and reinvest in Weld v. Weld, 23 R. I. 311, 50 Atl. 490, and it was there held, in effect, that the trustees were to have full powers of management, and of investment and of reinvestment, and of sale in their discretion, subject to the exception that the railroad bonds should be retained until they could be sold at par. The court there gave a reasonable construction to language which was apparently inconsistent and repugnant.

So in the case at bar we think the repugnancy and inconsistency of the language above quoted is more apparent than real. We do not find that by the language last quoted it was the plain intention of the testator to override his positive direction that the trustees "must hand over the entire estate * * * to any grandchildren," etc. It is plain from a reading of the whole will, "every word in this will being written by my own hand," as the testator says at the conclusion, that there are several slight ambiguities and inconsistencies therein, which may have arisen from lack of legal advice and from lack of skill in clearly stating his intentions. We think that, in the provisions which, literally interpreted, would impose limitations upon the "unlimited powers" given to the trustees in the last-quoted clause, the testator was rather vaguely expressing a desire that the trustees should not indulge in unnecessary changes of investment, but should, so far as possible, keep his estate together as he had left it for the security of income for the benefit of his wife and his only son, and of the annuitants.

It appears that the entire estate in the hands of the trustees is valued at upwards of $8,000,000. It also appears that the only active duty of the trustees now remaining to be performed, beyond the management of the estate, is the payment of $5,500 annually out of the income to the survivors of the 11 annuitants, some 8 in number at the date of filing the bill (May 25, 1918), all of whom appear joined with the trustees as parties complainant, and represented before the court by counsel, and joining in the prayers for construction.

It is suggested and urged in effect by counsel for all these complainants, as well as by the counsel and guardian ad litem for the defendant, Mary Weld, that it is hardly conceivable that the testator, if he had foreseen the present situation of affairs, would intentionally have directed that an estate of upwards of $3,000,000, with an annual income of upwards of $120,000, should be kept together as a whole solely for the security of an annual payment of $5,500 for an indefinite period, which may last for 25 years. And it is further urged that the substantial intention of the testator, as shown from the whole will, can best be carried out by directing the trustees to continue to hold a sufficient amount of the assets in their hands for the security of said annual payments, aggregating $5,500, and to "hand over" the rest of the assets to the defendant, who is now equitably entitled to the entire fund, subject only to said annual payments.

We are of the opinion that, inasmuch as the only parties now interested in the trust estate, other than the defendant, are all before the court urging this course of conduct, and in effect waiving the literal interpretation of the language of the will (which can only apply to their interests), a case is presented for the termination of the trust as to so much of the estate in the hands of the trustees as shall remain after it has been ascertained how much and what particular portions of the trust estate should be retained in the hands of the trustees for the security of the annual payments of $5,500.

As the bill also asks for the examination and approval of the accounts of the trustees, it will be appropriate that the cause be remanded to the superior court sitting in the county of Newport, with direction that the cause be referred to a master in chancery for the purpose of examining the accounts of the trustees, with a view to their settlement, and also for the purpose of inquiring and reporting as to what portions of the trust estate shall remain in the hands of the trustees for the security and payment of said annual sum of $5,500, and for such further proceedings as may be properly incident to the conclusion of the cause.

The parties may present for approval by this court a form of decree in accordance herewith.

(42 R. I. 8)

SPRAGUE v. TOWN COUNCIL OF TOWN OF WEST WARWICK. (No. 803.)

(Supreme Court of Rhode Island. Nov. 20, 1918. On Motion for Reargument Nov. 22, 1918.)

1. ELECTIONS ¶194(3) — INDICATION OF CHOICE—ERASURES—INTENT.

Where a voter placed a mark in the wrong square and then blotted out that square partially with pencil and marked another square, the ballot was illegal, regardless of his intent in view of Gen. Laws 1909, c. 11, § 46, providing that no voter shall place any mark on his ballot by which it may be identified, since such mark furnished a means for identification.

2. ELECTIONS ¶194(6)—MARKING BALLOTS — IMPROPER PLACES.

A ballot whereon the voter placed a cross in the circle at the head of the ticket and in the square opposite each candidate's name was invalid, under Gen. Laws 1909, c. 11, § 46.

3. ELECTIONS ¶194(6) — INDICATION OF CHOICE—MARKING BALLOTS.

A ballot whereon the voter placed a cross wholly outside the party circle and between it and the party emblem at the top of the ballot was invalid, in view of Gen. Laws 1909, c. 11, § 46.

4. ELECTIONS ¶194(3) — BALLOTS — INDISTINCT MARKS.

Where a ballot in addition to the regular cross contained dim and very fine pencil marks, which evidently were mere inadvertent touches of the pencil during the marking of the ballot, it was nevertheless valid, notwithstanding Gen. Laws 1909, c. 11, § 46.

5. ELECTIONS ¶194(11) — BALLOTS — INDISTINCT MARKS.

Presence of indistinct pencil mark in immediate vicinity of party circle on ballot when there was a cross within the circle did not invalidate the ballot, notwithstanding Gen. Laws 1909, c. 11, § 46.

6. ELECTIONS ¶194(11) — BALLOTS — INDISTINCT MARKS.

An indistinct pencil line through the party circle at the top of the ballot did not invalidate the ballot, where the voter also placed proper crosses in the squares opposite the names of the candidates, notwithstanding Gen. Laws 1909, c. 11, § 46.

Petition by Charles H. Sprague for the certiorari to review the canvass of votes by the Town Council of the Town of West Warwick. Record of the Council quashed in so far as it declared that there was no election for first councilman, and that certain ballots were illegal.

Alexander L. Churchill, John F. Murphy, and Felix Hebert, all of Providence, for petitioner.

Joseph C. Cawley, of Providence, and Patrick F. Barry, Town Sol., of Riverpoint, for respondent.

VINCENT, J. This is a petition for a writ of certiorari brought by Charles H. Sprague of the town of West Warwick in the state of Rhode Island, and sets forth that the petitioner was a candidate for the office of first councilman of the town council of said West Warwick at the election held on November 5, 1918; that at such election he received a majority of the votes cast for that office; that the votes were counted by the several moderators of the several voting districts in said town, and that by such count it appeared that the petitioner had received a majority of the votes for said office; that said votes were duly transmitted to the town clerk of said town of West Warwick, and that on November 6, 1918, the town council of West Warwick, sitting as a board of canvassers, counted the ballots cast for the office of first councilman, and declared that the petitioner, Charles H. Sprague, the Republican candidate for said office, and Frank P. Duffy, the Democratic candidate for said office, had each received the same number of votes; and thereupon said town council, acting as a board of canvassers as aforesaid, declared that there had been no election for the office of first councilman in said town of West Warwick at said election held on November 5, 1918.

The petition further alleges that said town council of West Warwick, acting as a board of canvassers as aforesaid, wrongfully and illegally held that certain ballots cast for the said Charles H. Sprague bore distinguishing marks, and therefore were defective and void, and could not be counted for the said Charles H. Sprague, whereas in truth and in fact said ballots were lawful ballots, and should have been so declared and counted.

Upon this petition a writ of certiorari was issued to the town council of the town of West Warwick, commanding the production, before this court, of the ballots cast for first councilman at said election, together with the record of said town council, acting as a board of canvassers, relating thereto.

The record of the proceedings referred to and the ballots alleged to have been improperly rejected are before us. These ballots are six in number. They were offered in evidence at the hearing by the petitioner, and marked as exhibits from 1 to 6, both inclusive.

In Exhibit No. 1 it is evident that the voter, after making crosses in the squares at the right of the greater part of the names comprising the Republican ticket, either changed his mind regarding one of the names to which he had appended the cross, or had placed the cross in the square unintentionally. To make the correction which he desired, he blackened the square with his pencil, partially concealing the cross, and placed a cross in the square opposite the name of the candidate for the same office on the Democratic ticket.

In Exhibit No. 3 the voter, with the apparent intention of voting the straight Republican ticket, placed a cross entirely without the circle and in the blank space between the circle and the eagle.

In Exhibit No. 6 the voter seems to have placed a cross in the circle and also a cross in the square opposite each name on the Republican ticket. The crosses opposite the names bear evidence of an attempt to erase them, although they are still apparent without close scrutiny. At the bottom of this same ballot are the words, "Will this town grant licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors?" These words are inclosed between two horizontal and parallel lines. These lines are extended to the right so as to include two squares one above the other. On the left of these squares and between the horizontal lines the word "Yes" is placed opposite the upper one and the word "No" opposite the lower one. The voter failed to place any mark within either of these squares, but instead partially blotted out with his pencil the word "No."

[1, 2] The markings upon the ballots, Exhibits 1 and 6, though probably not in either case designed by the voter to be a distinguishing mark, for the purpose of subsequent identification, would nevertheless furnish the means by which such identification would be feasible. The nature of these markings leaves no ground for an inference that they resulted from accident or inadvertence. They were made deliberately and intentionally, to serve a purpose which the voter had in mind. While the voter in each case may not have had any actual wrongful intent he has, as a matter of fact, placed something upon his ballot rendering it capable of identification.

[3] In regard to the ballot, Exhibit 3, there is little that need be said. The cross being entirely without the circle, there is a failure to comply with the statute, and the petitioner does not claim that such ballot should be counted.

We think that these ballots, Exhibits 1, 3, and 6, were properly rejected.

[4] Upon the ballot Exhibit 2 there are two pencil marks. These marks are very fine, somewhat dim, and are not such as would readily attract the attention of an ordinary observer. Their position and appearance fail to suggest any connection between them and anything else appearing upon the ballot. They have no descriptive form or characteristics, and seem to be nothing more than inadvertent touches of the pencil during the operation of marking the ballot.

[5, 6] Upon the ballot, Exhibit 4, there is a cross within the circle and a pencil mark in the immediate vicinity of the circle, and upon the ballot, Exhibit 5, there is a somewhat faint pencil line extending across the circle, the circle not having been used, the voter placing crosses in the squares at the right of the names of the candidates for whom he desired to vote. What we have said as to the ballot Exhibit 2 is equally applicable to the ballots Exhibits 4 and 5.

By General Laws 1909, c. 11, § 46, it is provided that:

"No voter shall place any mark upon his ballot by which it may afterwards be identified as the one voted by him."

In the case of Rice v. Town Council of Westerly, 35 R. I. 117, at pages 122 and 123, 85 Atl. 553, this court has clearly stated the rule which should be applied in determining the validity of ballots bearing additional marks, and has distinguished those ballots where the voter places upon his ballot a mark unconnected with the voting mark, which additional mark appears to have been knowingly and intentionally placed, from those where it appears that the voter has made some additional mark inadvertently or through want of skill in the handling of the pencil.

We think that the three ballots, Exhibits 2, 4, and 5, are valid ballots, and should have been counted for the petitioner Charles H. Sprague.

So much of the record of the town council of West Warwick, acting as a board of canvassers, as declares that there was no election for first councilman, and that the three ballots, Exhibits 2, 4, and 5, are defective and void and could not be counted for the said Charles H. Sprague, is quashed.

On Motion for Reargument.

PER CURIAM. Upon motion for reargument on behalf of the respondents filed November 22, 1918, it is ordered that the motion be denied.

(43 R. I. 12)

STATE ex rel. SPRAGUE v. TOWN COUNCIL OF TOWN OF WEST WARWICK. (No. 305.)

(Supreme Court of Rhode Island. Nov. 29, 1918.)

1. ELECTIONS ~~305~~258 — CANVASSING BOARD — EXPIRATION OF TERM.

Where, pending certiorari against a town council as canvassing board, new councilmen qualified, except the one bringing certiorari, who had been declared not elected, the old council was not functus officio as a canvassing board and must carry out an order of the Supreme Court directing that votes thrown out be counted for petitioner.

2. ELECTIONS ~~305~~305(9) — CONTEST OF ELECTION — CERTIORARI — DETERMINATION — NECESSITY FOR RECOUNT.

Where canvassing board declared an election a tie, and on certiorari court ordered that certain votes thrown out be counted for petitioner, it is not necessary that all the votes be recounted; the only question being as to the validity of votes thrown out.

Petition for writ of mandamus by the State of Rhode Island, by Herbert A. Rice, Attorney General, on the relation of Charles H. Sprague, against Walter A. Hoxie and others, Town Council of Town of West Warwick. Writ granted.

Wilson, Gardner & Churchill, of Providence, for petitioner.

Joseph C. Cawley, of Providence, and Patrick F. Barry, Town Sol., of Riverpoint, for respondent.

VINCENT, J. This is a petition for a writ of mandamus brought by Herbert A. Rice, Attorney General of the state of Rhode Island, upon the relation of Charles H. Sprague, of the town of West Warwick, against Walter A. Hoxie, Alfred Richard, Joseph E. Maynard, Eugene C. Baxter, and George W. Godfrey.

At the election in the town of West Warwick on November 5, 1918, the name of Charles H. Sprague appeared on the ballots as the Republican candidate for first councilman and the name of Frank P. Duffy as the Democratic candidate for that office. On the day following the election the town council met and, sitting as a board of canvassers, proceeded to count the ballots cast at said election, including those cast for the respective candidates for the office of first councilman. After rejecting six of the ballots cast for Sprague on the ground that they were illegal and void, because they bore distinguishing marks, the board of canvassers found that each of the said candidates, Sprague and Duffy, had received an equal number of votes, whereupon it was declared by said board of canvassers that there was no election of first councilman and a record to that effect was accordingly made.

On November 7, 1918, Charles H. Sprague filed his petition for writ of certiorari against the town council of the town of West Warwick, which appears on the files of this court as miscellaneous petition 303. The record of the board of canvassers in that case disclosed that six ballots for Sprague had been thrown out as bearing distinguishing marks, leaving an equal number of votes for Sprague and Duffy, and that there was no election for first councilman in the town of West Warwick.

After a hearing upon the petition for a writ of certiorari, this court handed down an opinion on November 20, 1918, in which it was held that three of the rejected ballots, Exhibits 2, 4, and 5, were valid ballots, and should have been counted for the petitioner, Charles H. Sprague, and that so much of the record of the town council of the town of West Warwick, acting as a board of canvassers, as declared that there was no election for first councilman, and that the three ballots aforesaid were defective and void, and could not be counted, should be quashed.

The petition for a writ of mandamus now before us sets forth that Walter A. Hoxie and the other above-mentioned respondents were on November 21, 1918, duly notified of the finding of this court upon the petition for a writ of certiorari, and also of the modification of a former restraining order, such modification permitting and authorizing the said Walter A. Hoxie to act as a member of said town council sitting as a board of canvassers, to complete the count of votes for office of first councilman of the said town of West Warwick, etc.; that said Walter A. Hoxie, president of the town council as aforesaid, has refused to call a meeting of said town council to act as a board of canvassers to complete the count of said ballots as aforesaid for the office of first councilman as aforesaid, and that the other respondents named have refused and neglected and still do refuse and neglect to meet as a board of canvassers for the purposes before mentioned; and the petitioner prays for an order of this court to said respondents to show cause, if any they have, why a writ of mandamus should not issue, requiring and commanding them immediately to call a meeting of the town council of the town of West Warwick to sit as a board of canvassers to complete the count of ballots cast for the office of first councilman of said town on November 5, 1918.

[1] At the hearing upon the petition for a writ of mandamus the respondents appeared by counsel and objected to the issuance of such writ, upon the ground that the town council of West Warwick, upon whom devolved the duty of counting the ballots and recording the result of such count, had gone out of existence and was functus officio. They argued that, the board of canvassers having counted the votes for first councilman and declared the result of such count, and four newly elected members of the town council having qualified, there is now no existing board of canvassers competent to act in the matters now before this court. They further argue that, the board of canvassers having counted the votes for first councilman, excluding certain ballots as defective, and declared the vote for first councilman to be a tie, the former first councilman elected in 1916 would hold over.

We cannot accept the view put forward by the respondents. We think that the members of the former town council still comprise the board of canvassers, upon whom devolves the duty to complete their record in the respects indicated by this court in its opinion upon the petition for a writ of certiorari. Through certain errors committed by the board of canvassers in their count, three votes for Charles H. Sprague were improperly rejected as defective, and were not counted as ballots for the office of first councilman. Having found that such ballots were improperly rejected, and should have been counted for Charles H. Sprague, it naturally followed that the record of the board of canvassers to the effect that there was an equal number of votes for Sprague and Duffy and that there was no election for first councilman should be quashed, and that the board of canvassers must give effect to the three ballots found to have been improperly rejected, and make such a declaration and such a record as would be conformable to the opinion of this court.

[2] The respondents contended at the hearing that, if there was to be any further counting in the matter on the part of the board of canvassers, they should again count or recount the whole number of votes cast at the election for the office of first councilman. We do not see that another count of the whole number of votes cast for the first councilman is called for. The board of canvassers made its count and declared the result thereof, which was that each candidate had an equal number of votes; six ballots having been rejected as bearing marks of identification. This court found that three of those ballots were properly rejected, and three were improperly rejected. It is not claimed that the count of the other ballots was improper, and such count therefore stands. The only question which was before us under the petition for the writ of certiorari was the validity of the six ballots before referred to, and the only matter now devolving upon the board of canvassers is to deal with the ballots found to have been improperly rejected, and to make its declaration and record in accordance with the opinion of this court heretofore rendered.

In the present case there would seem to be, in effect, little practical difference between the two forms of the order submitted for entry.

It has been argued that the respondents have shown a willingness, if not a desire, to evade the findings of this court as set forth in its opinion heretofore rendered upon the petition for a writ of certiorari, and to do things which would not be in conformity with the spirit thereof. We cannot assume that such a situation will arise. We think our former opinion upon the petition for a writ of certiorari and the views which we have now here expressed set forth with sufficient clearness the duty which now devolves upon the respondents, and that they will not disregard or undertake to evade that course of conduct in the matter which we have so explicitly pointed out.

A writ of mandamus is issued, directing the respondent Walter A. Hoxie to forthwith call a meeting of the town council of the town of West Warwick as it was constituted on the 6th day of November, 1918, consisting of Walter A. Hoxie, Alfred Richard, Joseph E. Maynard, Eugene C. Baxter, and George A. Godfrey, to sit as a board of canvassers to complete the count of votes for the office of first councilman of the town of West Warwick cast at the election on November 5, 1918, and that the said Walter A. Hoxie and the other above-named respondents, acting as a board of canvassers for the town of West Warwick, shall forthwith proceed to complete the count of the votes for the office of first councilman cast at the election on November 5, 1918, and upon the completion of said count forthwith declare and record the result thereof.

(7 Boyce, 151)

IN RE KILLCOURSE.

(Court of General Sessions of Delaware. New Castle. Sept. 30, 1918.)

CRIMINAL LAW §576(6)—CUSTODY OF PRISONER—GRAND JURY'S FAILURE TO INDICT—DISCHARGE.

Prisoner held on charge of highway robbery, who is not indicted at term during which he was committed, will not be discharged, but, under Rev. Code 1915, §§ 4492, 4847, will be held to bail until the next term.

In the matter of Thomas Killcourse, in custody on a charge of highway robbery. On motion for his discharge. Denied.

PENNEWILL, C. J., and RICE and HEISEL, JJ., sitting.

David J. Reinhardt, Atty. Gen., and P. Warren Green, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the State.

L. Irving Handy, of Wilmington, for accused.

Motion for the discharge of Thomas Killcourse, in custody on a charge of highway robbery. Motion denied.

Mr. Handy moved for the discharge of the prisoner from the workhouse, for the reason that the grand jury had been discharged for the then term to which the prisoner had been held, without returning an indictment against him. In re Tomer et al., 3 Pennewill, 31, 50 Atl. 268, was relied on.

The Attorney General opposed the motion, relying on the statute, Rev. Code, 1915, §§ 4492, 4847, being the same, as follows:

"If any person shall be committed for treason, or felony, and shall not be indicted and tried at the next term of the court where such crime is cognizable, he shall be set at liberty on bail, unless it appear by affidavit that the witnesses for the State (naming them) could not then be had; and if such prisoner shall not be indicted and tried at the second term after his commitment, he shall be discharged from prison."

HEISEL, J. We think the statute is perfectly clear, and that it applies to this case; that this being the first term, the defendant may be held to bail until the next term, and must be indicted and tried at the next term or discharged. We distinguish this case from the case of In re Tomer et al., 3 Pennewill, 31, 50 Atl. 268, because in that case the offense charged was a misdemeanor.

Killcourse was held in $1,000 bail for his appearance at the following November term.

(7 Boyce, 153)

STATE v. FITZSIMMONS.

(Court of General Sessions of Delaware. New Castle. Sept. 27, 1918.)

1. LARCENY §1—DEFINITION.

Larceny is the felonious taking and carrying away of the property or goods of another without the consent of the owner, and with intention on part of taker to convert them to his own use.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Larceny.]

2. LARCENY §14(1)—"LARCENY BY TRICK."

"Larceny by trick" is the felonious or wrongful taking, by means of securing possession thereof, by deception practiced on owner.

3. LARCENY §14(1)—LARCENY BY TRICK—SWITCHING DIAMONDS.

Where defendant, offered three unset diamonds for sale, took prospective customer to jeweler who tested and found diamonds to be genuine, refused to sell at purchaser's price, and after having left purchaser substituted glass stones for the diamonds, and returned and sold stones as though they were the ones previously tested, he was guilty of larceny by trick.

William Fitzsimmons was indicted for larceny by trick. Verdict of guilty.

HEISEL, J., sitting.

David J. Reinhardt, Atty. Gen., and P. Warren Green, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the State.

James Saulsbury, of Wilmington, for accused.

Indictment No. 128, September term, 1918.

William Fitzsimmons was indicted for larceny by trick. The defense was an alibi. Verdict guilty.

The proof was that the method employed by the accused was what is known as "switching" diamonds. The accused and another met H. on Market street in Wilmington on the morning of the 18th and showed him three unset diamonds which they wished to dispose of. H. took the diamonds into a jewelry store, where he had them tested and found that the diamonds were stones of the first water. He thereupon offered to the accused $250 for the three diamonds which was refused by the latter; he remarking that if they were unsuccessful in selling the stones at the price desired they might see H. later. Later in the day H. went to his home and found the accused and his companion waiting for him at a nearby grocery store. The accused after some conversation with H. agreed to accept the offer as made by H. earlier in the day. Thereupon they accompanied him to his home, where he secured the money and after examining the stones and satisfying himself that they were genuine he laid them down and proceeded to pay the accused for the same. After the accused and his companion had left H. became suspicious about the three stones and upon taking them to a jeweler's for examination found that they were glass. H. claimed that during the process of paying for the stones at his house the accused had switched or removed the three diamonds which he purchased and had substituted glass for the same. It was also shown that after the arrest of the accused, the $250 as restitution money was returned to H. through his counsel, who received the same through counsel for the accused.

HEISEL, J., charging the jury:

Gentlemen of the jury: In this case the accused, William Fitzsimmons, is charged with the larceny of certain paper money of the aggregate value of $250 from one William E. Hance.

[1, 2] Larceny is the felonious taking and carrying away of the property or goods of another without the consent of the owner and with the intention on the part of the taker to convert them to his own use. There is a species of larceny that is known as larceny by trick; that is, where the felonious or wrongful taking is brought about by reason of some deception upon the part of the taker practiced upon the owner of the goods, whereby he gets the possession of the goods.

The law says that if a man gets property from another in that way for the purpose of converting it to his own use he is guilty of larceny.

In this case the state charges that the defendant took three diamonds after they had been selected and purchased from him by the prosecuting witness, and substituted in place of them three worthless pieces of glass, and in that manner got possession of $250, the property of the prosecuting witness.

[3] The defendant denies that he had anything to do with the transaction, and claims he was not in Wilmington at the time. The only disputed point in this case is whether or not the accused is the man who substituted the pieces of glass for the diamonds. You have heard all of the evidence in this case, and after considering that evidence, if you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused is the man who committed the offense charged in the indictment and you also believe the other facts testified to by witnesses for the state, you should find this defendant guilty; otherwise, you should find him not guilty.

Verdict guilty.

(7 Boyce, 155)

ROBERTSON et al. v. WILMINGTON & P. TRACTION CO. et al.

(Superior Court of Delaware. New Castle. July 3, 1918.)

1. CARRIERS \S 18(2) — RATES — ORDER OF UTILITY COMMISSIONERS — NOTICE OF APPEAL.

A notice of appeal by citizens and taxpayers from an order of the board of public utility commissioners for a city, made on a given date and granting to a traction company "the right to charge a seven-cent fare per passenger riding on cars of such company," is sufficient under 26 Del. Laws, c. 206, § 6, requiring the notice of appeal to set forth the order appealed from.

2. CARRIERS \S 18(2)—RATES—APPEAL FROM ORDER OF COMMISSIONERS—SUFFICIENCY.

That a petition by citizens and taxpayers for the stay of an order by the board of public utility commissioners of the city, from which an appeal has been taken, was also signed by others than the parties signing the notice of appeal, does not invalidate the notice.

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW \S 62—DELEGATION OF LEGISLATIVE POWER—UTILITIES COMMISSION.

An order of the board of public utility commissioners, created by legislative act and given supervision over public utilities, fixing rates to be charged by traction companies, was not void as an exercise of delegated legislative power.

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW \S 135—IMPAIRMENT OF CONTRACTS — CARRIERS — CHANGE OF RATES.

A provision in the charter of a traction company, whereby the company shall not at any time be allowed to charge a greater amount than five cents for any one fare, may be changed by the consent of the parties, if the rights of the people are not injuriously affected; such change not constituting an impairment of an obligation of a contract.

5. CARRIERS \S 12(1)—PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS—POWERS—INCREASE OF RATES.

The board of public utility commissioners for the city of Wilmington may allow an increase of rates to a traction company under a law giving it supervision over all public utilities, and power to make such orders as it may deem proper concerning rates.

6. CARRIERS \S 12(6½) — HEARINGS—FIXING RATES—PARTIES ENTITLED TO BE HEARD.

Under the statute creating the board of public utility commissioners for the city of Wilmington, a public utility, as well as a citizen, has the right to be heard and to obtain a change in its rates.

7. CARRIERS \S 12(6½) — PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS—HEARING—NOTICE OF HEARING.

Under a statute creating the board of public utility commissioners for the city of Wilmington, rates of a traction company cannot be changed on ex parte application of the company, without an opportunity accorded upon public notice to citizens and taxpayers to be heard.

Appeal from Order of Board of Public Utility Commissioners.

Proceeding by the Wilmington & Philadelphia Traction Company before the Board of Public Utility Commissioners for the City of Wilmington to increase its rates. From an order allowing the increase, James W. Robertson and others appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Argued before PENNEWILL, C. J., and RICE and HEISEL, JJ.

Robert G. Harman, of Wilmington, for appellants.

Herbert H. Ward and Andrew C. Gray, both of Wilmington, for appellee Wilmington & P. Traction Co.

Thomas F. Bayard, City Sol., for Board of Public Utility Commissioners for city of Wilmington.

Appeal by James W. Robertson and others from an order of the Board of Public Utility Commissioners for the city of Wilmington, granting the Wilmington & Philadelphia Traction Company the right to charge a seven-cent fare per passenger. Order not affirmed but, by consent, amended.

The Wilmington & Philadelphia Traction Company, on May 7, 1918, presented a petition to the Board of Public Utility Commissioners asking for the right to increase the rate of fare from five cents to six cents per passenger. On June 3, 1918, the company presented an amendment to the petition asking for the right to increase the fare to seven cents per passenger, and on the same day without an opportunity for objection to be heard, a decision was reached by the board granting the prayer of the amended petition for a seven-cent fare, and, on June 5, 1918, the board formally adopted an order or resolution to that effect. An appeal from the order was taken, under chapter 206, volume 26, Laws of Delaware, and a special session of the Superior Court to hear and determine the appeal was called for June 14, 1918, at 11 o'clock a. m., as provided by Superior Court Rules Nos. 85 and 86. The court being convened on the last mentioned date, Mr. Harman, for the appellants and many other citizens and taxpayers of the city of Wilmington and patrons of the respondent company, presented and read to the court a petition asking for a stay of the order appealed from and a restraining order against the respondent company preventing them from charging more than a five-cent fare, pending final determination of the appeal.

Mr. Bayard, for Board of Public Utility Commissioners, first objected that the notice of appeal filed did not set forth the order appealed from, in accordance with the requirements of the statute creating the board. Chapter 206, vol. 28, Laws of Delaware.

PENNEWILL, C. J. The statute provides:

"Sec. 6. All orders made by said board pursuant to the power and authority given by this act, shall be served on the public utility to be affected thereby, within a reasonable time after such order is made, by the delivery of a certified copy thereof to the person to be affected thereby, or to any officer or agent of any corporation, association or joint-stock company upon whom a summons may be served in accordance with the provisions of the laws of this state. Such order or orders shall take effect within a reasonable time, such time to be fixed in such order. Within thirty days from the date of service of any such order or orders, any party to the proceedings, person or company affected may appeal from such order or orders to the Superior Court of the state of Delaware, by filing a notice of appeal, setting forth the order appealed from, with the prothonotary of the said court, which said court is hereby given jurisdiction to hear and determine such appeal on the merits of the matters forming the basis of the order. The taking of an appeal shall not stay the operation of the order appealed from, but a stay may be granted by the court in its discretion, either with or without terms and conditions. * * *

The order appealed from is an "order of the Board of Public Utility Commissioners for the city of Wilmington, made on Wednesday, the 5th day of June, A. D. 1918, granting to the Wilmington & Philadelphia Traction Company the right to charge a seven-cent fare per passenger riding on the cars of said company."

[1] We think the notice of appeal is in substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute.

Mr. Bayard, for Board of Public Utility Commissioners, then objected to the petition for a stay of the order appealed from, on the ground that it was signed by persons who were not parties to the notice of appeal.

PENNEWILL, C. J. [2] Since the filing of the notice of appeal, certain remonstrants have filed a petition signed by the parties who signed the notice of appeal, and by many others. We do not see how that invalidates the notice of appeal, if the petition includes the same names, even though it embraces others also.

Mr. Ward, of counsel for Wilmington & Philadelphia Traction Company, stating that he was appearing amicus curiae, asked the court to define the status of Mr. Gray and himself, as no citation had been issued or served on the Wilmington & Philadelphia Traction Company, asking for a stay of the said order, and that he and Mr. Gray were in court only upon verbal notice given them by Mr. Harman that the court would be sitting.

PENNEWILL, C. J. The application now before the court is for an order to stay the order made by the Board of Public Utility Commissioners, and nothing more. It is in the nature of a restraining order in the Court of Chancery; and, in analogy to the practice in that court, we hold that the notice of the application given by counsel is sufficient, and the company is now permitted to resist the application, if it desires to do so.

Superior Court Rule 86 is as follows:

"Upon the filing of the notice of appeal from an order made by the Board of Public Utility Commissioners, the prothonotary shall forthwith issue citation to the appellee returnable within ten days, and shall also forthwith issue notice to the said Board of Public Utility Commissioners to be served upon any member thereof, and to be returned within ten days, commanding them to send to said court, together with the notice, the record of their proceedings in the case, certified under the hand of the secretary and seal of the commissioners."

It is unnecessary now to determine who is meant by the word "appellee" in the rule of court, but we will direct the prothonotary to issue citation to the company. Citation was thereupon issued, served and returned.

At this point, on the 14th day of June, 1918, after a conference and by agreement of counsel with the court, the company was permitted to charge a six-cent fare per passenger during the pendency of the appeal.

The court was then adjourned until the 24th day of June, 1918. On reconvening, the appellants contended that the Board of Public Utility Commissioners did not have the power or authority to grant the company the right to increase its fare from five cents to seven cents per passenger, and its order or resolution was therefore void. On the contrary it was contended that under the statute creating the Board of Public Utility Commissioners for the city of Wilmington, the board had power to raise or lower the rates charged by any public utility operating in the city of Wilmington.

PENNEWILL, C. J., delivering the opinion of the court:

The Wilmington City Railway Company and the Front and Union Street Railway Company were incorporated by special act of the Legislature before the passage of the General Incorporation Law, and by amendment to their charters the maximum rate of fare was fixed at five cents, in the following language:

"And the said company shall not at any time be allowed to charge a greater amount than five cents for any one fare, ticket or ride in their cars through the said city."

On the 5th day of June, A. D. 1918, the Board of Public Utility Commissioners made an order granting to said railway companies the right to charge seven cents for a fare, and from that order this appeal was taken.

The Board of Public Utility Commissioners was created by an act of the Legislature, and the parts of the act material to this case may be stated as follows:

"The said board shall have supervision over all public utilities operating within the limits of the said city of Wilmington. * * *

"The said board shall have general supervision over all public utilities as herein defined, within the limits of the city of Wilmington, and shall have power, after hearing upon notice, by order in writing * * * to hear and examine complaints concerning rates charged by any such public utility as herein defined, and to make such recommendations and orders as it may deem proper concerning such rates."

There are many other powers conferred upon the board by the act, and they are for the most part of a supervisory character.

The appellants deny the authority of the board to grant to the railway companies the right to charge a higher fare than that fixed by statute, viz. five cents, because—

First. The Constitution of this state vests all legislative power in the General Assembly, and such power cannot be delegated to any other body. The fixing of rates to be charged by a railway company is a legislative power, and, therefore, the act of the board was without authority and void.

Second. If the Legislature can confer upon said board the power to regulate rates under some circumstances, it cannot grant an increase beyond the maximum rate fixed by statute or by the charter of the company, because such an act would impair the obligation of a contract made between the state and the company.

Third. The act creating said board, when fairly construed, cannot be held to mean that the board has, under a right to regulate fares, the power to establish rates when a maximum rate of fare had already been fixed by statute.

Fourth. If the Legislature could delegate to the Board of Public Utility Commissioners the right to fix rates of fare to be charged by said railway companies, and the act of the board would not be an impairment of a contract between the state and the companies, but rather a police regulation, then such right could not be conferred except by express language, and certainly not by implication. The act did not confer such right by express language, or even by implication.

We will consider these grounds urged by the appellants, in the order in which they are stated.

[3] In support of the first ground, the well-known case of Rice v. Foster, 4 Har. 479, 489, is cited. The court are clearly of the opinion that this case is not applicable to the present one. In the Rice-Foster Case the Legislature had passed "An act authorizing the people to decide by ballot whether the license to retail intoxicating liquor shall be permitted among them." It involved the right of the people of the county to pass a legislative act. In the case before the court the Legislature created a state agency and invested that body with power to perform a legislative act, viz. to regulate the rates that city railways should charge. In one case it was the delegation of legislative power to the people, and in the other it was the exercise of legislative power by an agency of the state, just as it would have been if the power had been given to the municipality, the city of Wilmington. The distinction, we think, is clear, and the case referred to cannot, therefore, be regarded as an authority in support of appellants' contention.

[4] Upon the second ground urged against the act of the board, the court were by no means free from doubt, and our difficulty was much increased because of the fact that there is a decision in our own state by the Court of Errors and Appeals that seemed to be against the decided preponderance of authority in other states.

Undoubtedly the important, indeed, the vital question in the present case is this: Was the statutory provision which fixed the maximum fare that the railway companies should charge, at five cents, a contract or a mere regulation or condition, subject to the police power of the state? In most states, and notably in New Jersey, every doubt in such controversies is resolved in favor of the police power, and a stipulation respecting the rate of fare to be charged by a railway company, in a statute or municipal ordinance, is held to be, wherever possible, a condition or regulation, and not a contract binding upon the state. But the authorities practically agree that it is possible for the state to make such a contract, and whenever the language clearly and unmistakably shows that such was the intention of the Legislature, it is binding, and cannot be changed except by the consent of the contracting parties.

In no case, perhaps, has the law upon the subject been more clearly and succinctly stated than in Milwaukee v. R. R. Commission of Wisconsin, 238 U. S. 174, 35 Sup. Ct. 820, 59 L. Ed. 1254. Mr. Justice Day, in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"The fixing of rates which may be charged by public service corporations, of the character here involved, is a legislative function of the state, and while the right to make contracts which shall prevent the state during a given period from exercising this important power has been recognized and approved by judicial decisions, it has been uniformly held in this court that the renunciation of a sovereign right of this character must be evidenced by terms so clear and unequivocal as to permit of no doubt as to their proper construction."

To the same effect is the case of Home Telephone Co. v. Los Angeles, 211 U. S. 265, 273, 29 Sup. Ct. 50, 52 (53 L. Ed. 176), wherein the court said:

"For the very reason that such a contract has the effect of extinguishing pro tanto an undoubted power of government, both its existence and the authority to make it must clearly and unmistakably appear, and all doubts must be resolved in favor of the continuance of the power."

Undoubtedly the reason for the law as now recognized and declared by the courts is to some extent the growth and development of the police power of the state. The importance and necessity of such power is better understood now than formerly, and many acts are now regarded as within its scope which were not so considered in former years.

The Delaware case of P., W. & B. R. R. Co. v. Bowers, 4 Houst. 506, 534, was decided in 1873. In that case Chancellor Bates said:

"The power to adjust its tariff of charges by its own officers, according to their views of the necessities of business and of justice to the public, without supervision, was a part of the franchise as it was granted. The attempted regulation by the Legislature of this power materially abridges the beneficial exercise of it by the corporation, and without any doubt impairs the obligation of the contract in the sense of the Constitution as interpreted by the Dartmouth College Case."

It is true that since the decision by Chancellor Bates the police power of the state has been very much extended by statute and judicial decision, but such doctrine was urged by counsel and considered by the court in that case, and it was distinctly held that the power of the company "to adjust its tariff by its own officers according to the necessities of business and justice to the public, was a contract the obligation of which the Legislature could not impair," and not a regulation that was subject to the police power of the state. This was a decision by the highest court of the state and cannot be lightly considered or disregarded because of changed conditions. It would seem to dispose of the question so fully argued by counsel in the present case—whether the power given by the Legislature to a public utility company to charge certain rates is a contract or mere regulation.

We say very frankly that the Bowers Case will not be disregarded by this court unless the present case can be distinguished therefrom.

It clearly appears from the authorities that the fixing of rates to be charged by public service corporations is a governmental function, and that it can be conferred by the Legislature on a state agency, such as a municipality or public utility commission; that when the rate has been fixed by statute it cannot be changed by one party without the consent of the other, if the grant of the right clearly and unmistakably constitutes a contract between the parties; if it was not a contract, but a mere regulation, prohibition or condition of franchise, the state may, under its police power, which is an attribute of sovereignty, regulate or alter the rate that had been fixed by statute, municipal ordinance or commission's order.

Applying to the present case the test contained in the opinion of Justice Day above quoted, was the fixing by statute of a maximum rate of five cents a renunciation of the sovereign right to fix rates evidenced by terms so clear and unequivocal as to permit of no doubt as to their proper construction? Was it clearly a contract between the state and the companies, or merely the condition of a power or franchise granted? When the Legislature said the companies should not charge a rate exceeding five cents, there was, of course, an implied agreement that they should have a right to charge that much; but was it in fact anything more than a prohibition against charging a higher fare? It is true that, when the companies accepted the provisions of the statute that fixed the maximum rate, they impliedly agreed not to charge more than such rate; but was the language employed such as to evidence unequivocally an agreement that the state had renounced the right to fix a different rate?

In the absence of the Bowers Case, we would say the sovereign right of the state to regulate the rates to be charged by said companies in the future could not be defeated by such language as was employed in the statute, and that there was no contract between the state and the companies that precluded the state, in the exercise of its police power, from changing the rate of fare fixed by the statute. We feel, however, that so far as this question is concerned the decision referred to should be controlling upon this court, although, in view of the great weight of modern authority, the Supreme Court of the state might very well lay down a different rule from the one declared in the Bowers Case.

But this is not a case where the state, through the agency of the utility board, is endeavoring to reduce the fare below the sum which it had agreed might be charged, or to limit the right or power that had been given to the company, as in the Bowers Case. Neither is it a case where the company, upon its own motion, had charged more than five cents, which it had agreed not to exceed. It is a case where the state, which had fixed a maximum rate of five cents, agrees, through an agency it had created, that the companies may charge a higher rate, the other party to the contract consenting thereto. So that even though there was a contract binding on the parties that made it, it was possible for them to change it if it was right and proper to do so.

Our conclusion, therefore, is that, if there was a contract, the parties thereto could change it, provided the rights of the people were not thereby injuriously affected. From what we have said it is obvious that the Bowers Case is distinguishable from the one now before the court, and that our conclusion is not in conflict with the decision given in that case.

We come now to the consideration of the appellants' last point, viz. that the act creating the Board of Public Utility Commissioners does not, when fairly construed, confer upon the board the power to regulate fares when a rate had been already established by statute.

Does the act creating the Board of Public Utility Commissioners for the city of Wilmington confer upon said board the power to regulate the fares to be charged by the railway companies aboved mentioned?

[5] It is difficult to escape the conviction when the entire act is considered, that one of its purposes was to regulate the charges of public utility corporations. The powers given to the board over public utilities of the city are so broad and controlling that it is impossible to believe that the Legislature did not intend that the power to regulate fares should be included. But there is a provision of the act which, in the opinion of the court, expressly gives such powers, viz. the provision "to hear and examine complaints concerning rates charged by any such public utility as herein defined, and to make such recommendations and orders as it may deem proper concerning such rates."

When the board is given power to hear complaints concerning rates charged by a railway company, or other public utility, and make such orders as it may deem proper concerning such rates, we must conclude that it had the power to change any rate that the Legislature could have changed. It was made an agency of the state and vested with all the power the Legislature possessed respecting the fixing of rates for public utilities in the city of Wilmington, subject, of course, to the right of appeal. And this power is given, we think, not only by implication from the general and broad language of the act, but also by express language.

[6] It would be placing upon the statute a construction entirely too narrow to say it means that an individual may complain, but not the company. It is hardly necessary to say that the act was meant to be fair and useful to both individual and company, and that there might be conditions in which either would have cause to complain.

The court having determined that the board had power to regulate fares, Mr. Harman requested that a day be fixed for the hearing of the appeal on its merits, and contended that it should be heard de novo, and not on the record. Without passing upon this question, the court thereupon, after examining the record, said:

PENNEWILL, C. J. We have carefully examined the record in this case, and as a result of that examination we announce the following decision:

[7] The act creating the Board of Public Utility Commissioners manifestly contemplates that before an order shall be made regulating the rates that shall be charged by any public utility company, a hearing shall be given to citizens respecting the complaint filed, or a reasonable opportunity for such hearing. The board is clothed with large powers and they should be exercised fairly to both the company and the public. It was not intended that an order shall be made upon information received in an ex parte proceeding, or without a fair opportunity for any citizen to state his objection to complainant's application.

The petition presented to the board by the railway companies, on May 7, 1918, asked for the right to increase the rate of fare to six cents, and upon that application a reasonable opportunity was given to any one who might desire to be heard, but upon the amendment to the petition, which was presented to the board June 3, 1918, and which asked for the right to increase the fare to seven cents, we are of the opinion that such an opportunity was not given.

The first notice of a request for a seven-cent fare was made to the board by petition, on June 3d, and on the same day a decision was reached by the board granting said request; its solicitor being called in and directed to "prepare a resolution showing the findings of the board, based on the following":

"That an order be drawn that the Wilmington & Philadelphia Traction Company be permitted to charge a straight seven-cent fare, but shall be required to sell four tickets for twenty-five cents."

So it appears from the record that the public had no notice respecting the seven-cent fare before the board had determined to grant the company's request.

It is true that the order or resolution granting the right to charge a seven-cent fare was not formally adopted until June 5th, but there was no public notice given that it would be deferred until that date. It is also true that protest was made on the 3d and 5th of June, by certain persons, but that did not relieve the board of their duty to give reasonable notice to the public of the application before deciding the case. And, moreover, as to the protest made on June 3d and 5th, the secretary was instructed, on June 5th, to reply to the protestants "that the board has had two public meetings, and that they will decide the issue on the facts laid before them." By "two public meetings," reference could have been had only to the meeting of May 21st, which was with respect to a six-cent fare, and the meeting of June 3d, of which the public had no notice, so far as the record shows, and at which the question of an increase to seven cents was presented and determined.

The court have no doubt that the board have endeavored to do their duty to all parties, but we think it not improper to suggest that their duties might be made easier in the future if they should adopt some plain and simple rules governing their procedure, including a rule providing for a fair hearing on the part of both the public and the public utility.

For the reasons given, the court are of the opinion that the order of the board appealed from should not be affirmed on the record filed in the case.

Counsel for appellants and for the Wilmington & Philadelphia Traction Company, respectively, then conferred and announced an agreement to permit the company to give the six-cent fare a trial for a reasonable length of time, with the right, if found insufficient, to make a new application to the Board of Public Utility Commissioners.

PENNEWILL, C. J. We think the real parties before us are the appellants and the railway company, and with their consent we will amend the order made by the board so that it shall read as follows:

That the Wilmington & Philadelphia Traction Company be permitted to charge a straight six-cent fare.

(117 Me. 455)

COBB v. CUMBERLAND COUNTY POWER & LIGHT CO.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Nov. 15, 1918.)

1. STREET RAILROADS ¶85(4) — MUTUAL RIGHTS AND DUTIES.

An electric car and an automobile are on an equality at a street junction, and a close watch is required on the part of the motorman.

2. NEGLIGENCE ¶93(2) — IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE.

Negligence of plaintiff's husband, in full management of automobile which collided with defendant's street car, could not be imputed to plaintiff, who was merely a passenger in automobile.

3. STREET RAILROADS ¶114(6) — COLLISION AT STREET INTERSECTION—EVIDENCE.

In action for damages sustained by plaintiff when automobile in which she was riding collided with defendant motor company's electric car at a street junction, evidence held to warrant verdict for plaintiff.

4. STREET RAILROADS ¶83 — REGISTRATION OF AUTOMOBILE—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Where automobile, registered under Rev. St. c. 26, § 24, as to registration "to purchase, demonstrate, sell, and exchange automobiles," was, at time of collision with street car, used for pleasure alone, it was the same as if the automobile had not been registered at all.

5. STREET RAILROADS ¶102(1)—COLLISION—FAILURE TO REGISTER AUTOMOBILE—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Although Rev. St. c. 26, § 28, forbids operation of automobile upon any highway unless registered, nonregistration of automobile in which plaintiff was riding at time of collision with defendant's street car at street junction would not, where it had no causal connection with injury, preclude recovery in common-law action for negligence.

6. LICENSES ¶14(1) — PENAL STATUTE — STRICT CONSTRUCTION.

Rev. St. c. 26, § 83, prescribing a fine not exceeding $50 or imprisonment not exceeding 10 days for violation of preceding sections with reference to registration of automobile, etc., is penal in its nature, and is to be construed strictly.

7. LICENSES ¶5 — POWER OF LEGISLATURE — REGISTRATION OF AUTOMOBILE.

It was within power of Legislature to impose, within constitutional limits, penalties for failure to register automobile, procure operator's license, etc.

8. TORTS ¶18—ACTION—DEFENSE.

The right of a person to maintain an action for a wrong committed upon him is not taken away because at the time of the injury he was disobeying a statute, provided disobedience in no way contributed to injury.

Exceptions from Supreme Judicial Court, Cumberland County, at Law.

Action by Florence W. Cobb against the Cumberland County Power & Light Company. Verdict for plaintiff, and the case is before the law court on defendant's motion and exceptions. Motion and exceptions overruled.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Frank H. Haskell, of Portland, for plaintiff.

Bradley & Linnell, of Portland, and William Lyons, of Westbrook, for defendant.

CORNISH, C. J. This is an action on the case, brought to recover damages for personal injuries received by the plaintiff while a passenger in an automobile operated by her husband, and struck by an electric car operated by servants of the defendant. A verdict for $775 was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and the case is before the law court on defendant's motion and exceptions.

Motion.

The accident occurred about 11 o'clock in the evening of April 17, 1917, in the city of Portland. Mr. and Mrs. Cobb, with five other passengers, entered Congress street, which runs in a general easterly and westerly direction, from Oak street, which runs in a general northerly and southerly direction. The approach to Congress street was from the southerly side. The purpose of Mr. Cobb was to cross the electric tracks on Congress street, and then turning to the left to proceed westerly on the northerly side. At the same time a car was approaching and moving easterly on the southerly track of the electric railroad.

The plaintiff and her husband claim that as they emerged from Oak street the electric car was quite a distance to the west on Congress street and seemed to be slowing down as if to stop; that they supposed they had ample time in which to cross without incurring any danger whatever; that the husband gave the hand signal and proceeded slowly on his way straight across the tracks, and when the rear wheels of the automobile had passed nearly over the southerly track it was violently struck by the car, thrown around upon the northerly track, and headed toward the west.

The defendant's contention is that the electric car was coasting along Congress street at a rate of 4 to 5 miles an hour, and was under complete and watchful control; that the automobile, on emerging from Oak street, did not proceed straight on, but turned easterly and proceeded along Congress street in the same direction as the electric car for a distance of about 25 feet, and then darted suddenly toward the track and without warning went directly in the path of the car at a point so close to the car that, notwithstanding the immediate application of the brakes, the collision could not be averted. These were the sharp contentions as to the manner in which the accident happened. The evidence was flatly contradictory, and the jury evidently took the plaintiff's view.

[1] So far as the negligence of the defendant is concerned it should be remembered that the collision took place at a street junction, a place where the electric car and the automobile are on an equality, and a close watch is required on the part of the motorman. Marden v. Street Railway Co., 100 Me. 41, 60 Atl. 530, 69 L. R. A. 300, 109 Am. St. Rep. 476. This rule as to the duties of drivers of all vehicles at street junctions must be strictly observed. It tends to safety in travel.

When questioned in regard to his conduct, the motorman testified:

"If we follow an automobile, and a hand signal is given, we understand he is going across in front of us, either in one direction or the other; but an automobile coming out of a side street to cross directly in front of us, and give us a hand signal, they either wait or take their chances of going across."

This answer may have given to the jury the impression that the motorman claimed a priority of passage, or was regardless of, or at least indifferent to, the rights of travelers approaching from a side street.

[2] So far as the plaintiff's want of due care is concerned, it should be noted that she was merely a passenger sitting on the rear seat; that her husband, an experienced driver, was in full management and control of the machine; and, even though he might be deemed guilty of contributory negligence, his negligence was not imputable to her. Denis v. Street Railway Co., 104 Me. 89, 70 Atl. 1047. It further appears that she did not blindly rely on him, because she also looked, saw the car some distance up the street, and observed nothing to indicate peril in crossing the track.

[3] Without further discussion, we would say that, while the case is somewhat close, we do not regard the verdict so palpably wrong as to warrant our intervention.

Exceptions.

[4] The exceptions involve two questions: First, whether the automobile, considering the purpose for which it was being used at the time, was legally registered. Second, if not, whether nonregistration is a bar to recovery.

As to the first point, it appears that this automobile was registered under the provisions of R. S. c. 26, § 24, then in force. This section provided that, instead of the separate and individual registration of each car by a manufacturer or dealer, such manufacturer or dealer could obtain a certificate of registration bearing a general distinguishing number or mark, together with five number plates, so that for the specified number of cars the same number and distinguishing mark might be used. This was called a certificate of registration "to purchase, demonstrate, sell, and exchange automobiles." It was not a general and unlimited license for all purposes and uses, but for the restricted uses named. It did not include riding for pleasure, nor for hire. On this occasion the auto was being used obviously for no one of the restricted uses, but for pleasure alone, and therefore, so far as this particular trip was concerned, and as relating to this accident, it was the same as if the car had not been registered at all.

[5] This brings us to the second and vital point, whether, considering this as an unregistered car, the plaintiff is thereby precluded from recovering in this common-law action for negligence.

We are aware that the Massachusetts court has so construed the registration statute of that state as to render an unregistered car a trespasser and an outlaw, having no rights which even a negligent party is bound to respect, and to whose occupants no duty is owed by the travelling public, except to refrain from willful and wanton injury.

The leading Massachusetts case is Dudley v. Northampton Street Railway, 202 Mass. 443, 89 N. E. 25, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 561, a decision rendered by a divided court, and the opinion likens such an unregistered car to a runaway horse, citing Richards v. Enfield, 13 Gray (Mass.) 344, and Higgins v. Boston, 148 Mass. 484, 20 N. E. 105. Those citations are not precedents for Dudley v. Northampton St. Ry., because they are not actions at common law, but statutory actions against municipalities arising from defects in the highway, a distinction which will be noted later in discussing McCarthy v. Leeds, 115 Me. 184, 98 Atl. 72, L. R. A. 1916E, 1212, and McCarthy, Adm'r, v. Same, 116 Me. 275, 101 Atl. 448. To the same class belongs Feeley v. Melrose, 205 Mass. 329, 91 N. E. 306, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1156, 137 Am. St. Rep. 445.

But the decision in Dudley v. Street Railway has been followed by the Massachusetts court in subsequent cases, and is unquestionably the law of that commonwealth to-day. Chase v. N. Y. Cen. R. R., 208 Mass. 187, 158, 94 N. E. 377; Love v. Street Railway, 213 Mass. 137, 99 N. E. 960; Holden v. McGillicuddy, 215 Mass. 563, 102 N. E. 923; Dean v. Boston Elevated Ry., 217 Mass. 495, 105 N. E. 616; Gould v. Elder, 219 Mass. 396, 107 N. E. 59; Koonovsky v. Quелlette, 226 Mass. 474, 116 N. E. 243, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 1146; Rolli v. Converse, 227 Mass. 162, 116 N. E. 507.

It would seem, however, that this reaffirmation has been at times somewhat reluctant, because in Bourne v. Whitman, 209 Mass. 155, 172, 95 N. E. 404, 408 (35 L. R. A. [N. S.] 701), the court, in commenting upon the Dudley Case, said:

"Some of us were disinclined to lay down the law so broadly, and the opinion of the court was not unanimous; but the doctrine has been repeatedly reaffirmed and is now the established law of the commonwealth."

The Massachusetts cases rest wholly upon the interpretation of the words of the statute. They recognize and concede the common-law doctrine that the violation of a statute or ordinance does not constitute negligence per se, and does not prohibit a plaintiff from recovering in an action of negligence, unless such violation is the direct and proximate cause contributing to the act, but they hold that it does not apply. The most striking illustration, perhaps, is Bourne v. Whitman, 209 Mass. 169, 95 N. E. 408, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 701, cited supra, where it was held that an operator, who has violated the statute, which provides that "no person shall operate an automobile * * * unless specially licensed," etc., may recover in an action of tort; his unlawful act being regarded as punishable under another section of the statute, but not as rendering him a trespasser on the highway.

It is only in the case of nonregistration that the Massachusetts court has construed the statute so broadly, and we think they have read into the statute more than its language will permit, and have attached to the consequences of nonregistration more than the legislative enactment will warrant. The statutory provisions are almost identically the same in the two states, so that it is impossible to distinguish the Massachusetts cases by reason of a difference in the statutes.

We therefore take up our own statute, with a view to determining whether the Legislature, in the case of nonregistration, has created a duty to other travelers on the highway, or only a public duty to be enforced in the ordinary administration of the criminal law; in other words, whether the offender is in effect penalized beyond the express provisions of the statute.

[8] The general rule, which needs no citation of authorities, is that penal statutes are to be construed strictly, and not to be extended beyond their obvious import. The penalties to be imposed are those expressed in clear and explicit terms. Inferential penalties are not to be discovered and enforced.

Section 28 of R. S. c. 26, reads as follows:

"No motor vehicle of any kind shall be operated by a resident of this state upon any highway * * * unless registered as provided in this chapter, and no person, a resident of the state, shall operate a motor vehicle upon any highway * * * unless licensed to do so under the provisions of section 31."

Other minor requirements as to sale and exchange are added, and in section 33 it is provided that whoever violates any of the provisions of the nine preceding sections shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $50 or by imprisonment not exceeding 10 days.

[7] No distinction is made between any of the offenses. The same penalty within fixed limits is meted out to all. Nonregistration of the machine is made no greater crime than nonlicensing of the driver. It was within the power of the Legislature to impose such penalties, within constitutional limitations, as it saw fit. It imposed a small fine or a short imprisonment. It might have added the forfeiture of the car, as in the case of the illegal transportation of intoxicating liquors (P. L. 1917, c. 294), or it might have subjected the owner of the unregistered car and the occupants to civil liabilities, but it did neither. The difference between wrongs to the public and to the individual is well marked and the Legislature in other acts recognizes both. Thus in R. S. c. 26, §§ 2, 6, the law of the road, so called, there are certain provisions as to travelers turning to the right, not obstructing passage, using bells, etc., and section 6 reads:

"Any person injured by violation of either of the previous sections, may recover damages in an action on the case, commenced within one year. Such violator forfeits not less than one, nor more than twenty dollars, to be recovered on complaint made within sixty days."

Here both a penalty and the liability to civil action are expressly stated.

An apt and striking illustration may be found in the legislation and decisions of Connecticut on the precise point under consideration. Under the Public Acts of Connecticut 1907, c. 221, automobiles were required to be registered and a penalty was provided for violation of the law. Under that act it was held that a party could recover against a municipality for injuries sustained from a defect in the highway although his car was unregistered. Hemming v. New Haven, 82 Conn. 661, 74 Atl. 892, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 734, 18 Ann. Cas. 240. It should be observed that the contrary rule prevails in this state (McCarthy v. Leeds, 115 Me. 134, 98 Atl. 72, L. R. A. 1916E, 1212; McCarthy, Admr., v. Leeds, 116 Me. 275, 101 Atl. 448); but that does not affect the force of the illustration. Subsequently the statute of Connecticut was amended and an additional liability was placed upon the violator. Pub. Laws Conn. 1911, c. 85. This expressly provided, in addition to the penalty previously imposed, that no recovery should be had by the owner, operator, or passenger of an unregistered motor vehicle "for any injury to person or property received by reason of the operation of said motor while in or upon the public highways in this state." Under this act the owner of an unregistered car has been held to be absolutely precluded from maintaining an action for negligence. Stroud v. Water Commissioners, 90 Conn. 412, 97 Atl. 338. No other conclusion could well have been reached, because the taking away of the violator's civil rights was distinctly specified. Nothing was left to implication.

The Legislature of Maine has not seen fit to impose this liability upon the violator of the registration section, and the court does not feel justified in reading such a drastic clause into the section, and in effect multiplying many times the fine imposed by statute.

We see nothing in the language of the registration clause which differentiates it from the license clause. They follow each other and together constitute one sentence. They are expressed in substantially the same language:

"No motor vehicle shall be operated * * * unless registered." "No person shall operate a motor vehicle unless licensed."

Their breach is followed by the same penalty. We can discover no legislative intent of civil disabilities lurking in one clause which does not pertain to the other. The license clause is held by the Massachusetts court to be nonpreclusive. Why should not the registration clause be also? If in practice either should be held prohibitive of the right to maintain a civil suit, there are more practical reasons for attaching the prohibition to the animate and nonlicensed driver than to the inanimate and unregistered car. An inert automobile of itself is harmless, whether registered or not. It is only when in motion that danger attaches. But an unlicensed driver operating a machine may be the cause of much mischief. "What is gained by the display of a license number is not the avoidance of collisions, but the more ready identification of the machine and its responsible owner," says the New Jersey court in Shaw v. Thielbahr, 82 N. Y. Law, 23, 81 Atl. 497. The act providing for registration has no tendency to prevent collisions, while that requiring the licensing of operators does have that tendency, in so far as it may prevent incompetent persons from managing an engine fraught with such capacity for injury. The Legislature, however, has made no distinction between the two and has provided merely a penalty in either case, and the same penalty.

[§] This construction brings us back to the familiar principle that the right of a person to maintain an action for a wrong committed upon him is not taken away because at the time of the injury he was disobeying a statute, provided this disobedience in no way contributed to the injury. He is not placed outside the pale of the law merely because he was committing a misdemeanor. That would be a wrong to the public, but not to the other party in the civil action. Such violation may in certain cases be evidence of negligence, but it is not conclusive. Gilmore v. Ross, 72 Me. 194; Burbank v. Bethel Steam Mill Co., 75 Me. 373, 46 Am. Rep. 400; Neal v. Randall, 98 Me. 69, 56 Atl. 209, 63 L. R. A. 668; Wood v. Me. Cen. R. Co., 101 Me. 469, 64 Atl. 833; Moore v. Same, 106 Me. 297, 76 Atl. 871; Kimball v. Davis, 117 Me. 187, 108 Atl. 154; Kidder v. Dunstable, 11 Gray (Mass.) 342; Spofoord v. Harlow, 8 Allen (Mass.) 176; Counter v. Couch, 8 Allen (Mass.) 436; Hall v. Ripley, 119 Mass. 135; O'Brien v. Hudner, 182 Mass. 381, 65 N. E. 788; Slattery v. Lawrence Ice Co., 190 Mass. 79, 76 N. E. 459; Jaehnig v. Ferguson Co., 197 Mass. 364, 83 N. E. 868; Bourne v. Whitman, 209 Mass. 169, 95 N. E. 404, 85 L. R. A. (N. S.) 701; Holland v. Boston, 213 Mass. 560, 100 N. E. 1009; Holden v. McGillicuddy, 215 Mass. 563, 102 N. E. 923; Oonroy v. Mather, 217 Mass. 91, 104 N. E. 487, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 801; Carrington v. Worcester St. Ry., 222 Mass. 119, 109 N. E. 828.

The application of this governing rule to the case at bar is obvious. The nonregistration had no causal connection with the accident whatever. It no more contributed to the collision in this case than did the color of the car. The one was as immaterial as the other. Therefore the violation of the statute did not bar the plaintiff's right of recovery.

This view of the effect of the registration section is uniformly held, outside of Massachusetts, so far as we have been able to ascertain. Birmingham Ry. & L. Co. v. Attna Acc. & Liab. Co., 184 Ala. 604, 64 South. 44; Stovall v. Corey Highlands Land Co., 189 Ala. 576, 66 South. 577; Shimoda v. Bundy, 24 Cal. App. 677, 142 Pac. 109; Atlantic Coast Line R. R. Co. v. Weir, 63 Fla. 69, 58 South. 641, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 307, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 126, and note; Moore v. Hart, 171 Ky. 725, 188 S. W. 861; Lockridge v. Minneapolis R. R., 161 Iowa, 74, 140 N. W. 834, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 158; Armstead v. Lounsberry, 129 Minn. 34, 151 N. W. 542, L. R. A. 1915D, 628, and note; Shaw v. Thielbahr, 82 N. J. Law, 23, 81 Atl. 497; Hyde v. McCreery, 145 App. Div. 729, 130 N. Y. Supp. 269; Black v. Moree, 135 Tenn. 73, 185 S. W. 682, L. R. A. 1916E, 1216; So. Ry. Co. v. Vaughan, 118 Va. 692, 88 S. E. 305, L. R. A. 1916E, 1222, and note; Derr v. R. R. Co., 163 Wis. 234, 157 N. W. 753; 2 R. C. L. 1208; 2 Elliott, Roads and Streets (3d Ed.) § 1115.

The defendant, however, contends that the recent decisions of this court have virtually adopted the Massachusetts rule. McCarthy

v. Leeds, 115 Me. 134, 98 Atl. 72, L. R. A. 1916E, 1212; McCarthy, Adm'r, v. Leeds, 116 Me. 275, 101 Atl. 448. Not so. The first case was brought by the owner of an unregistered automobile against the inhabitants of a town to recover for injuries sustained by reason of a defective bridge. The second was brought by the administrator of the estate of two of the passengers to recover on the same ground. Judgment was rendered in favor of the defendants in both actions and the decisions were based squarely and solely upon the proposition that the liability of a town for defects in its ways and bridges is purely statutory, and the duty owed by the town is only to lawful travelers; that the occupants of an unregistered automobile are not lawful travelers so far as the town is concerned, and therefore no duty is owed to them by the town, except to refrain from willful injury. This doctrine is well established in this state by a long line of analogous decisions; thus one using the street as a playground is not a lawful traveler, within the purview of the statutory liability of a town, Stinson v. Gardiner, 42 Me. 248, 66 Am. Dec. 281; nor for horse racing, McCarthy v. Portland, 67 Me. 167, 24 Am. Rep. 23; nor a traveler on the Lord's Day, under the old statute, Bryant v. Biddeford, 39 Me. 193; Hinckley v. Penobscot, 42 Me. 89; Cratty v. Bangor, 57 Me. 423, 2 Am. Rep. 56. The cases of McCarthy v. Leeds, supra, simply enforce the same rule, and the court drew the distinction between that class of actions and a common-law action for negligence in these words:

"It must be distinctly borne in mind that this is not a common-law action of negligence against an individual or a corporation, but a statutory remedy against a municipality, and the rights of the traveling public and the liability of the municipality are limited by the scope of the statute. * * * Here, as in the case of the violation of the Sunday law, it is not a question of causal connection between the violation of the statute and the happening of the accident. The same causes would be at work to produce an accident on Monday, or Tuesday, as on Sunday. So in the case at bar the mere nonregistration can hardly be regarded as a contributing cause. The railing of the bridge had no more strength to withstand the impact of a registered than of an unregistered car. The decision does not rest upon the common-law principle of causal connection." McCarthy, Adm'r, v. Leeds, 116 Me. 275, 101 Atl. 448.

Evidently the court anticipated the probable necessity of determining at some future time the precise question which has arisen in this common-law action now under consideration, and left itself free to decide that question upon common-law principles when it should arise. The decisions in these two distinct classes of cases are entirely consistent.

It is therefore the opinion of the court that the entry should be:

Motion and exceptions overruled.

(117 Me. 576)

DYER v. CUMBERLAND COUNTY POWER & LIGHT CO.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Nov. 19, 1918.)

1. STREET RAILROADS. ¶99(4) — COLLISION WITH VEHICLE — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Driver of motor truck, who was familiar with locality and knew that electric car was coming behind him, in stopping his truck in unobstructed road, 13 feet wide, so close to the track that the car would hit it within "a half to a minute," was guilty of contributory negligence, unless such action could be satisfactorily explained.

2. NEW TRIAL. ¶72 — GROUNDS — WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

In action by motor truck driver for personal injuries, sustained by collision with street car, evidence held so strongly preponderating against plaintiff, upon question of negligence of defendant, as to require that verdict in favor of plaintiff be set aside and new trial granted.

On Motion from Supreme Judicial Court, Cumberland County.

Action by Ernest R. Dyer against the Cumberland County Power & Light Company. Verdict for plaintiff, and defendant moves for a new trial. Motion sustained.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Hinckley & Hinckley, of Portland, for plaintiff.

Bradley & Linnell, of Portland, and William Lyons, of Westbrook, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. On March 26, 1917, the plaintiff sustained severe injuries in a collision between an auto truck, which he was driving, and an electric car of the defendant corporation, and has recovered a verdict for the damages sustained by him. The defendant moves for a new trial on the usual grounds.

The collision occurred on Main street in that part of the city of South Portland, known as Ligonla, a short distance westerly of Vaughan's bridge. The defendant corporation maintains a double track across the bridge and for some distance beyond, or westerly of, the bridge; a short distance westerly of the bridge, on the right hand, or northerly, side of the double track, was a white post; and just beyond the post a freight track of the Portland Terminal Company, running into the yards of the Standard Oil Company, crossed Main street and the electric railroad. A car coming out of Portland, making a stop at the white post, crossed the steam railroad tracks before stopping. About 160 or 170 feet westerly of the white post the outbound, or northerly, track curves to the left, or southerly, connecting with the inbound, or southerly, track, and from that point westerly, towards Saco, the line is a single track, which, just beyond the switch-curves to the right, or northerly, and occupies thus an electric car running from Portland to Saco, approaching the end of the double track, first takes a curve to the left, or southerly, until the single track is reached, and then takes a curve to the right, or northerly, until the location on the side of the highway is reached. On both sides of the double track is a roadway for teams, and there is a crossing of the single track where it curves to the side of the highway.

The collision occurred at the point where the two tracks connect. When the electric car stopped, the rear wheels of the forward truck were on the single track some eight or ten inches westerly of the switch points, and the rear truck was on the outbound, or northerly, track. At this point the roadway is 13 feet wide between the curb and the southerly rail.

The plaintiff asserts that upon the afternoon in question he was driving his auto truck to his residence in Scarborough along the right-hand side of the highway, on the northerly side of the defendant's tracks; that near the westerly, or South Portland, end of Vaughan's bridge he saw the electric car of the defendant bound for Saco, stationary on the track ahead of him, near the white post; that there were teams in the road ahead of him on the right-hand side, and that accordingly he turned his truck to the left, crossing the electric car tracks behind the Saco car, and, passing the car, stopped opposite the switch on account of some boys in the road in front of him; that, while thus stopped, the Saco car ran into his truck, overturning it, and causing the injuries which he sustained. He says that his truck had been stopped "perhaps between half and a minute" when the car struck it.

[1] It may well be said here that the action of the plaintiff, who was familiar with the locality and knew that the electric car was coming behind him, in stopping his truck in an unobstructed road, 13 feet wide, so close to the track that the car would hit it almost immediately, constituted contributory negligence, unless satisfactorily explained—as much so, as if he had stopped on the tracks. See Smith v. Somerset Traction Co., 104 Atl. 788, recently decided.

[2] But the defendant asserts that the Saco car on that trip did not stop at the white post; that it slowed down to cross the steam railroad tracks, then increased its speed to 7 or 8 miles an hour for a short distance, and then again slowed down to 3 or 4 miles an hour to take the switch and curve at the end of the double track; that the auto truck was not stopped in front of the car, and that no boys were to be seen in the road. The motorman insists that his first sight of the truck was when the right forward wheel appeared from behind, in front of the instant of the collision, and that then he stopped his car at once.

The sole issue is upon the alleged negligence of those in charge of the Saco car.

Without quoting the testimony at length, we may say that the evidence entirely fails to establish the charge of negligence on the part of the defendant's employes. The testimony of the conductor, of five passengers on the Saco car, and of one White, a watchman for the Standard Oil Company, who saw the collision from the sidewalk, shows beyond question that, when the plaintiff crossed from right to left behind the electric car, the truck took the inbound track and ran for a short distance along the rails, until both truck and electric car were approaching the end of the double track and the switch; that then, in attempting to leave the track, the plaintiff turned his truck to the left, the rear wheels skidded upon the rails, and the truck ran diagonally across the roadway, there 13 feet wide, striking the curb on the southerly side of the street; then, in the plaintiff's attempts to regain control of the truck, it shot back across the street and collided with the electric car in the manner described by the motorman and other witnesses in the vestibule. The evidence is plenary that this unfortunate accident happened substantially in the manner we have stated, and that the motorman acted promptly in stopping his car upon the instant when danger became apparent.

Very serious injuries were undoubtedly sustained by the plaintiff, for which he has recovered a verdict. We are disposed to apply the most severe tests to the evidence before disturbing that verdict; but the evidence, carefully and painstakingly considered, "so strongly preponderates against the plaintiff upon points vital to the result as to amount to a moral certainty that the jury erred in the conclusion reached by them" (Smith v. Insurance Co., 85 Me. 348, 27 Atl. 191), and the mandate must be:

Motion sustained. Verdict set aside. New trial granted.

(117 Me. 474)

STATE v. McDONALD et al.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Nov. 25, 1918.)

1. INSURANCE §811(3)—FIRE INSURANCE—VACANCY OF PREMISES—EFFECT UPON RIGHTS OF MORTGAGEE.

Where fire policy provided that it should become void if the premises became vacant, and as required by the Maine standard form, that if loss were payable to a mortgagee, no act of any other person should affect the right of such mortgagee in case of loss, the insurance continues as to the mortgagee notwithstanding vacancy caused by the owner and mortgagor.

2. ABSON §8—OCCUPANCY OF BUILDING—RIGHTS OF MORTGAGEE.

Although fire policy provided for forfeiture in case of vacancy, its further provision preventing the interest of mortgagee from being af-fectured by the act of any other person, continued the insurance, so that when the owner of the building intentionally set fire thereto, he was guilty of the offense defined by Rev. St. c. 128, § 22, of burning a building to defraud an insurer.

Report from Supreme Judicial Court, Penobscot County, at Law.

Duncan McDonald and Annette McDonald were prosecuted for willfully burning a building, insured against loss by fire. Case reported. Case remanded to nisi prius.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, MORRILL, and DEASY, JJ.

Albert L. Blanchard, Co. Atty., of Bangor, for the State.

Benjamin W. Blanchard, of Bangor, for respondents.

DEASY, J. Prosecution under Revised Statutes, c. 128, § 22, for willfully burning a building insured against loss or damage by fire, with intent to defraud the insurer. The case comes to the law court on report by order of the Presiding Justice as follows:

"This case is reported to the law court to have determined the question whether, upon the evidence in the case, any valid, existing insurance was upon the bungalow which was burned on the 28th day of August, 1917. If the law court finds that no such insurance did so exist, then the case is to be dismissed or to be nol. pros'd at nisi prius; otherwise the case to be sent back for trial upon the merits."

[1, 2] At the time the fire occurred the owner, Annette McDonald, had two policies of fire insurance on the building in force unless avoided by breach of the conditions of the policies. Both policies were in standard form. Both had vacancy permits attached. It is clear that on August 25th, when the building was damaged by fire, and on August 28th, when it was destroyed by another fire, it was unoccupied, and had been vacant so long and under such circumstances that the conditions of the policies and of the vacancy permits had been violated, and that the policies were void as contracts between the companies and the insured respondent. This conclusion is obvious from a reading of the evidence, and it would serve no useful purpose to state the reasons at length. Dolliver v. Fire Insurance Co., 111 Me. 275, 89 Atl. 8, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1106, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 765.

But one of the policies contained a mortgagee clause as follows:

"Payable in case of loss to the Maine Real Estate Title Company as its interest may appear as mortgagee."

One of the provisions of the Maine standard policy, which provision was contained in both of the policies involved in this case is as follows:

"If this policy shall be made payable to a mortgagee of the insured real estate no act or default of any person other than such mortgagee or his agents or those claiming under him shall affect such mortgagee's right to recover in case of loss on such real estate."

Notwithstanding the nonoccupancy and the forfeiture by the respondents, the mortgagee's rights under the policy remain valid and enforceable provided that at the date named the mortgage on the building was outstanding and unpaid, and provided that the breach of condition was not due to the act or default of the mortgagee. Gilman v. Commonwealth Insurance Co., 112 Me. 528, 92 Atl. 721, L. R. A. 1915C, 758, and cases cited.

If on August 28, 1917, the mortgage referred to running to the Maine Real Estate Title Company was in force, and if the non-occupancy was not wholly or in part due to any act or default on the part of the mortgagee, there apparently was at that date valid existing insurance upon the building in question; otherwise not.

Case remanded to nisi prius for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

(117 Me. 476)

LOOK v. WATSON et al.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Nov. 25, 1918.)

1. PARTNERSHIP ⇨55—RELATION—PROOF.

In an action against W. and others, as partners, allegation and proof by defendants that "W. & Sons" was the name of a corporation was not decisive on the question whether a partnership existed.

2. PARTNERSHIP ⇨204—GENERAL APPEARANCE—PROOF OF PARTNERSHIP.

A general appearance waives defects in service and want of jurisdiction over defendants' persons, but does not relieve plaintiff from proving that defendants were partners as alleged.

3. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⇨22(1)—PROOF OF RELATION.

While agency may be proved by testimony of the alleged agent, it cannot be proved by his admission out of court.

4. PARTNERSHIP ⇨38—ONE HOLDING HIMSELF OUT AS PARTNER—LIABILITY.

One who holds himself out as a partner is liable to another who, believing in and relying upon such partnership, enters into a contract involving the giving of credit to it, even though the former is not a partner, and notwithstanding that such supposed partnership is in fact, but without plaintiff's knowledge, a corporation.

5. PARTNERSHIP ⇨55—HOLDING OUT AS PARTNER—EVIDENCE.

In an action against alleged partners, evidence held to show that one of the defendants held himself out as a partner, and that plaintiff relied thereon.

6. PARTNERSHIP ⇨218(2)—DENIAL OF RELATION—AFFIDAVIT.

One sued as partner, who files no affidavit under Supreme Judicial Court rule 10 (70 Atl. viii), but who challenges the existence of the alleged partnership, is precluded from demanding affirmative proof upon that issue, but not from introducing negative proof.

7. PARTIES ⇨84(2), 92(1)—NONJOINER—MISJOINER—GENERAL ISSUE.

In actions of contract, when the situation does not appear upon inspection of the pleadings, nonjoinder must be pleaded in abatement, but misjoinder is available under the general issue.

eral as partners, but only proving that one held himself out as a partner, may, by amendment, have the names of those not proved to be partners stricken out.

9. PARTNERSHIP — 218(4) — GENERAL VERDICT — LIABILITY OF ONE.

Where plaintiff sued several as copartners, but only proved liability of one, there being no evidence that the others were partners and no amendment having been made under Rev. St. c. 87, § 14, exceptions to a general verdict must be sustained.

Exceptions from Supreme Judicial Court, Franklin County, at Law.

Assumpsit by John H. Look against C. A. Watson, R. A. Watson, and George Watson, as copartners under the name of C. A. Watson & Sons. From a ruling directing a verdict for plaintiff, defendants bring exceptions. Exceptions sustained.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, MORRILL, and DEASY, JJ.

Frank W. Butler, of Farmington, for plaintiff.

Elmer E. Richards and S. P. Mills, both of Farmington, for defendants.

DEASY, J. John H. Look brings this action of assumpsit on account annexed against C. A. Watson, R. A. Watson, and George Watson, as copartners under the name of C. A. Watson & Sons. A check is also declared upon, but not printed. The case comes to the law court upon exceptions to the ruling of the presiding justice, directing a verdict for the plaintiff.

[1] The defendants allege and prove that "C. A. Watson & Sons" is the name of a corporation. This fact is not decisive. It is not very material, unless it also appears that the dealings involved in this action were between the plaintiff and that corporation. The plaintiff, on the other hand, contends that his dealings were with a partnership doing business under the same name. He claims further that, if he has not proved the partnership, he has at least proved facts and circumstances which estop the defendants from denying its existence and its liability.

[2] The plaintiff urges that the defendant's appearance was general and not special. This point relates to jurisdiction, but does not go to the merits of the controversy. A general appearance waives defects in service and want of jurisdiction over the defendant's person, but does not relieve the plaintiff from the burden of proving the allegations of his writ.

[3] Turning to the evidence in the case, it appears that the plaintiff's transactions were largely with Joel P. Barrett. The defendants say that Barrett was agent for the corporation and not for them, or any of the individual defendants. He seeks to prove this by showing that Barrett, in reply to the plaintiff's inquiry, gave him the names of the defendants as his principals. But while agency may be proved by the testimony of the alleged agent, it cannot be proved by his admissions out of court.

"To permit the proving of the agency by proving the declarations of the agent would be assuming without proof that which is a prerequisite to the admissibility of the declaration." Bennett v. Talbot, 90 Me. 231, 38 Atl. 112; Hazeltine v. Miller, 44 Me. 177; Sleeper v. Insurance Co., 61 Me. 272; Eaton v. Provident Association, 89 Me. 53, 35 Atl. 1015; Hill v. Day, 108 Me. 472, 81 Atl. 581, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 971.

The defendants cannot be held on the principle of liability of an agent for an undisclosed principal. Neither R. A. Watson nor George Watson were concerned in making the contract sued upon, and there is no evidence that C. A. Watson was agent for the corporation for the purpose of buying apples.

The plaintiff testifies that C. A. Watson gave him express directions to pack and ship the apples in question. But the testimony of C. A. Watson, not categorically but in effect, contradicts this. It cannot be said that the evidence of the plaintiff so greatly and manifestly outweighs that of the defendant as to justify a directed verdict. If the directed verdict can be sustained, it must be upon the well-established principle of law, which we state thus:

[4] A defendant who holds himself out as a partner is liable to a plaintiff who, believing in and relying upon such partnership, enters into a contract involving the giving of credit to it. This principle applies although the defendant is not a partner and notwithstanding that such supposed partnership is in fact, but without the plaintiff's knowledge, a corporation.

The bare statement of this principle defines and status of the defendant, C. A. Watson, as shown by undisputed evidence.

[5] In the autumn of 1917 a large business in buying and shipping apples was conducted in Maine by C. A. Watson & Sons. This business was so carried on not only with the full knowledge of the defendant, C. A. Watson, but in some transactions with his active participation. The plaintiff received several checks signed, "C. A. Watson & Sons, by J. P. Barrett, Agent." The name "C. A. Watson & Sons" signifies to the ordinary mind not a corporation, but a partnership of which C. A. Watson is a member. The plaintiff was engaged by Joel P. Barrett to buy apples for this concern. Barrett did not inform the plaintiff that C. A. Watson & Sons was a corporation. He did not know it himself. At the Exchange Hotel, before the apples sued for were shipped, Barrett introduced the plaintiff to C. A. Watson as "the gentleman that was buying apples for him." The defendant, C. A. Watson, now says in substance:

"My name as used in connection with C. A. Watson & Sons did not mean me. It was merely a part of the name of a corporation in which I was not interested, either as officer, director, or stockholder."

But he said nothing tantamount to this, either to the plaintiff or Barrett, and said nothing and did nothing to correct in the mind of the plaintiff the very natural inference that he was dealing with a partnership in which C. A. Watson was concerned.

No question can well be raised as to the plaintiff's belief in and reliance upon the liability of C. A. Watson. Upon the undisputed evidence above summarized C. A. Watson held himself out as a partner, and is liable to the plaintiff as such.

This conclusion is abundantly supported by authorities.

Speer v. Bishop, 24 Ohio St. 598. This case arose under practice corresponding with a petition for review. The original action was against Henry Speer and others as co-partners under the name of Henry Speer & Co. It appeared that Henry Speer was not a member of the firm at the time the goods sued for were sold, and that there had been no previous dealings between the plaintiffs and the firm of Henry Speer & Co. The court in its opinion says:

"His (Henry Speer's) consent to such use of his name was, in effect, a continuing representation, to those ignorant of the facts, that he was one of the firm."

Hamilton v. Davis et al. (Sup.) 90 N. Y. Supp. 370. The defendants were sued as partners under the name of Davis & Darcy, upon a contract signed, "Davis & Darcy, per Chas. L. Young." Davis & Darcy was in fact (unknown to the plaintiff) a corporation, and the defendants contended that the action should have been brought against the corporation. The court holds:

"These circumstances justified the court below to hold that the defendant Davis was estopped from denying that the contract was made with a firm of which he and Darcy were the members. * * *

"It was apparent that the plaintiff was induced by Davis & Darcy to believe that she was contracting upon the faith of their liability as individuals and members of a firm. * * * The corporation bore a name, to their knowledge, and with their approval and consent, which would ordinarily indicate a copartnership, rather than an incorporated body."

Bourgeois v. Bustanoby, 78 Misc. Rep. 404, 138 N. Y. Supp. 366. This was an action for goods sold upon an order signed, "Bustanoby Bros., per Louis Bustanoby." The defendants proved in defense that Bustanoby Bros. was a corporation. In ordering judgment for the plaintiff the court says:

"The mere fact that a corporation existed under the name of Bustanoby Bros. does not prevent stockholders from making contracts individually, and, if they do make such contracts, they are personally liable; nor does it preclude the stockholders from forming a firm, and doing business under a firm name, even though the corporation may have also adopted the same name. In this cause the order was given under circumstances equivalent to a direct representation that the firm of Bustanoby Bros., composed of Louis, Andre, and Jacques Bustanoby, was giving the order, and the plaintiff had a right to make the contract with them and to hold them liable."

See, also, the following authorities: Haug v. Haug, 193 Ill. 645, 61 N. E. 1053; Kahn v. Bowden, 80 Ark. 23, 96 S. W. 126, 10 Ann. Cas. 132; Cirkel v. Crowell, 36 Minn. 323, 31 N. W. 513; Kritzer v. Sweet, 57 Mich. 617, 24 N. W. 764; Harris v. Crary, 67 Tex. 383, 3 S. W. 316; Ellis v. Jameson, 17 Me. 235; Rice v. Barrett, 116 Mass. 312; Smith v. Hill, 45 Vt. 91, 12 Am. Rep. 189.

We think that the liability of C. A. Watson is abundantly shown.

But the verdict is against C. A. Watson, R. A. Watson, and George Watson.

Whatever may be true of R. A. Watson, the undisputed evidence shows that George Watson was not a partner of C. A. Watson. It is not proved that he held himself out as such.

[6] The fact that no affidavit under Supreme Judicial Court rule 10 (70 Atl. viii) was filed is not decisive.

A defendant sued as a partner, who files no affidavit, but who challenges the existence of the alleged partnership, is precluded from demanding affirmative proof on that issue, but not from introducing negative proof. When not seasonably and on oath denied, the existence of an alleged partnership is prima facie, but not conclusively, presumed. Hewins v. Cargill, 67 Me. 554.

Misjoinder was not pleaded in abatement. It was not necessary.

[7] In actions of contract, when the situation does not appear upon inspection of the pleadings, nonjoinder must be pleaded in abatement, but misjoinder is available under the general issue.

"It is a well-established principle in the English law that in assumpsit, where too many defendants are joined, the plaintiff must fall in his action, though he prove an express or implied promise against some of them." Outta v. Gordon, 13 Me. 478, 29 Am. Dec. 520.

"If it [misjoinder] appears on the pleadings it gives rise to a demurrer; if it appears at the trial, to an adverse verdict." State v. Chandler, 79 Me. 174, 8 Atl. 553.

[8] Under the authority of R. S. c. 87, § 14, the plaintiff by amendment might have stricken out the name of any defendant not liable.

[9] This not having been done, and the verdict being general against all defendants, the entry must be:

Exceptions sustained.

1. WILLS §=832—PERSONAL ESTATE—RIGHTS OF CREDITORS.

Creditors of a decedent may always claim payment out of the personal estate, regardless of what the debtor's will may provide.

2. WILLS §=827—CHARGE—ACCEPTANCE CUM ONERE.

A testator, as between his distributees, may direct upon whom or upon what property any obligation of his shall ultimately fall, and if they accept his bounty they must do so cum onere.

3. WILLS §=847(3)—PAYMENT OF DEBTS—RESORT TO OTHER THAN PERSONALTY—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The personal estate being the primary fund for the payment of debts, a devisee asserting that any other part of the estate must be resorted to for that purpose has the burden of showing that such was the testator's intention.

4. WILLS §=882—CHARGE—INTENT.

The intention to exempt personalty bequeathed from application to the payment of indebtedness is sufficient if it appear by necessary implication collected from a sound interpretation of the whole will.

5. WILLS §=886—CHARGE—DESCRIPTIVE WORDS.

Where testator gave a half-brother a farm and tenement house, "subject to the widow dower," along a certain creek known as the Stoltzfus Farm, it could not be assumed that the words "subject to the widow dower," though not needed for descriptive purposes, were none the less used for that purpose, so that they were to be given their natural meaning.

6. WILLS §=827—CHARGE—INTENT.

No particular language is necessary to create a charge on land, and the intention to charge is to be carried out whenever it is discoverable from anything in the instrument.

7. WILLS §=836—CONSTRUCTION—CHARGE ON LAND.

In order to construe a will with reference to a charge of debts on land devised, the court must put itself in the testator's place.

8. WILLS §=840—CHARGE—CONSTRUCTION—"SUBJECT TO THE WIDOW DOWER."

Where testator gave to his half-brother a described farm and tenement house, "subject to the widow dower," the devisee took subject to the dower.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Subject to.]

9. WILLS §=489—CONSTRUCTION—EFFECT TO TESTATOR'S INTENTION.

A testator's intent must always be carried into effect unless inconsistent with established rules of law, and will not be defeated by any technical rules of construction.

10. WILLS §=684(5)—TRUST ESTATE—CHARGE—PAYMENT.

Where testator, after giving a life estate in trust to his widow, gave his half-brother a certain farm charged with widow's dower, which was secured by mortgage on the land, the trustees who, during the lifetime of the widow, received all the income of the estate, were bound to pay the interest on the mortgage, unless the widow elected to surrender her life interest in the land.

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Union County.

Petition by Sarah Alice Hartman and Gideon T. Bleh, executors and testamentary fer, deceased, for a citation against Charles Grant Shaffer to show cause why he should not be required to accept a devise and assume the dower debt and interest or forfeit all claims to the land in question. From a decree refusing the citation, the executors and testamentary trustees appeal. Reversed, petition reinstated, and decree rendered.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCH-ZISKER, FRAZER, WALLING, and SIMPSON, JJ.

Andrew A. Leiser and Andrew A. Leiser, Jr., both of Lewisburg, for appellants. Philip B. Linn, of Lewisburg, for appellee.

SIMPSON, J. Testator died leaving both real and personal estate. By his will he gave all his property in trust for his wife for life, and provided that—

"After the Death of my wife Angeline Shaffer, I will give and bequeath to my Half Brother Charles Grant Shaffer all that Farm and Tenement House, subject to the Widow Dower, along Buffalow Crick, known as the Stoltzfus farm and all the residue I will give and bequeath to Sarah Alice Hartman, Personal and real such as my Home stead along the Milton Road, Timber tract and the two Houses and lots in Lewisburg, Pa., by her paying one thousand dollars to the Bethany Orphans Home at Womelsdorf, Pa."

The widow's dower on the Stoltzfus farm consisted of the sum of $3,600, charged thereon, on testator's purchase of the property in partition proceedings; the income thereof to be paid to the widow of Jacob Stoltzfus, the former owner, during her life, and at her decease the principal to be paid to his nine children in equal shares. It was also secured by nine bonds and mortgages of this testator for $400 each. The widow of Jacob Stoltzfus died about eight months after the date of John W. Shaffer's will, and two days before his death, whereby the principal of the dower became forthwith payable to the nine children.

The trustees of the estate thereupon filed a petition, averring the above facts, praying that Charles Grant Shaffer, the devisee of the said Stoltzfus farm, after the death of testator's widow, should elect "whether or not he will accept the devise above mentioned cum onere," and forthwith discharge the said dower debt, "or forfeit all claim to said farm under said will." He answered the petition by electing to take the farm; but averred that the words "subject to the Widow Dower" were descriptive only, intended to designate the property referred to, and not meant as a charge thereon, and, as the obligation was a personal debt of testator, it was payable out of the personal and residuary estate. He declared his willingness, if that contention was not sustained, to take up the nine bonds and mortgages and have them assigned to himself; and in that event he prayed the court to decree that the trusttees and the widow should pay the interest thereon to him, as such assignee, during the lifetime of the widow.

Testimony was taken in the court below amplifying but in no respect affecting the facts above set forth, whereupon that court dismissed the petition, holding that the words "subject to the Widow Dower" were descriptive only, and that the personal estate, which is the primary fund for the payment of debts, should be used to discharge the principal of the dower. From that decree of dismissal the trustees prosecuted this appeal.

[1, 2] It is undoubtedly true that creditors of a decedent may always claim payment out of the personal estate, no matter what his will may provide. But it is equally true that a testator may direct, as between his distributees, upon whom or upon what property any obligation of his shall ultimately fall, and if they accept his bounty they must do so cum onere. Stump v. Findlay, 2 Rawle, 188, 19 Am. Dec. 632; Crone's Appeal, 108 Pa. 571; Armstrong v. Walker, 150 Pa. 585, 25 Atl. 53; Zimmerman v. Lebo, 151 Pa. 345, 24 Atl. 1082, 17 L. R. A. 536; Cooley v. Houston, 229 Pa. 495, 78 Atl. 1129.

[3, 4] It is also undoubtedly true that, as the personal estate is the primary fund for the payment of debts, he who asserts that any other part of the estate must be resorted to for the purpose has the burden of showing that such was the testator's intention. But it is likewise true, as quoted from 2 Powell on Devises, 671, that, when the testator declares his intention to be otherwise, the legatee or devisee who takes must take cum onere. As stated in Evenson's Appeal, 84 Pa. 172-178:

"It was formerly held that the intention to exempt the personalty must be expressly declared. Such is not the rule now. It is sufficient if it appear by necessary implication, collected from a sound interpretation of the whole will."

[5, 6] In this will the gift of the Stoltzfus farm is expressly made "subject to the Widow Dower." Those words are not needed to describe the farm. It is fully described without them. It is the "Stoltzfus farm." Testator had no other farm of that name. It is "along Buffalo Crick." Testator had no other property on Buffalo creek. We cannot assume that, though the words "subject to the Widow Dower" were not needed for a descriptive purpose, they were none the less used for that purpose, and hence they must be given their natural meaning. We have repeatedly held that "no particular language is necessary to create a charge on land; the intention to charge is to be carried out whenever it is discoverable from anything in the instrument." Okeon's Appeal, 59 Pa. 99; Duval's Estate, 146 Pa. 176, 23 Atl. 231; Dickerman v. Eddinger, 168 Pa. 240, 32 Atl. 41; Hammond's Estate, 197 Pa. 119, 46 Atl. 935.

[7, 8] It is not to be lost sight of, that this will was made by testator himself, or by some other person wholly ignorant of all technical rules. He did not know that clear expressions were needed to sustain a charge on land. He did know that he held the farm "subject to the Widow Dower," and he used apt words in his will to make his gift thereof likewise subject thereto. Probably every layman would read the will in precisely the same way; and putting ourselves in this testator's place, in order to construe his will, as indeed we must do (Postlethwaite's Appeal, 68 Pa. 477; Follweiler's Appeal, 102 Pa. 581; Webb v. Hitchins, 105 Pa. 91; Hermann's Estate, 220 Pa. 52, 69 Atl. 285), we also reach the same conclusion.

[9] A testator's intent must always be carried into effect unless inconsistent with established rules of law, and will not be defeated by any technical rules of construction. Webb v. Hitchins, supra; Wood v. Schoen, 216 Pa. 425, 66 Atl. 79; Arnold v. Muhlenberg College, 227 Pa. 321, 76 Atl. 30; Thompson's Estate, 229 Pa. 542, 79 Atl. 173. In the present instance, the intent being ascertained, there is no rule of law or construction standing in the way of carrying it into effect, unless we propose to wholly defeat it, and we have neither the right nor purpose so to do.

[10] We do not think, however, though the half-brother ultimately gets the farm subject to the dower, that he ought now to pay that dower. The devise to him does not take effect until "after the death" of testator's widow, who is still alive, and who receives, during her lifetime, all the income of the estate. When he gets the farm he gets it "subject to the Widow Dower," but not before. Consequently the trustees, who collect the income of the estate for the benefit of the widow, should pay the interest accruing on the mortgages during her lifetime, unless she elects to surrender her life interest therein. Any difficulty which might otherwise arise is met by the offer of appellee to pay the mortgages and take assignments of the mortgages, if it is decided that he is entitled to receive the interest thereon during the widow's life. Our decree will therefore so provide.

The decree of the court below is reversed, the petition is reinstated, and it is adjudged and decreed that the devise by John W. Shaffer, deceased, of his real estate known as the Stoltzfus farm to his half-brother Charles Grant Shaffer is expressly subject to the nine mortgages of $400 each now thereon, but the same is not payable by him or out of his interest in said property until the death of Angeline Shaffer, widow of said John W. Shaffer, unless she elects to surrender her life interest therein; that the said Charles Grant Shaffer may purchase, or cause to be purchased, the said nine mortgages, obtain assignments thereof, and hold the same against said property, with all the rights and remedies incident thereto, if the widow does not surrender her life interest in said property, and if the accruing interest on said mortgages is not paid during the lifetime of said widow; and upon her surrender of all interest in said property, or upon her decease, whichever shall happen first, said mortgages shall be satisfied of record.

The costs in the court below and in this court shall be borne equally by appellants and appellee.

(263 Pa. 55)

KREIS et al. v. CARTLEDGE.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. July 17, 1918.)

1. PARTNERSHIP §68(2)—PARTNERSHIP REALTY—STATUS.

While partnership realty is considered personality for partnership purposes, it is realty so far as the heirs and legal representatives of the partners are concerned.

2. PARTNERSHIP §68(2)—PARTNERSHIP PROPERTY—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where it did not appear that realty owned by former partners jointly was held by them for partnership purposes, it would be presumed that it was not partnership property.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §129(1)—CONTROL OVER REALTY.

In the absence of a necessity, such as a sale for the payment of debts, and on default of express provision in the will, an executor or administrator as such is without authority over realty belonging to the estate.

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §39 — ASSETS—REALTY.

Realty belonging to an estate descends directly to the heirs, or to the persons designated in the owner's will.

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §131—COLLECTION OF RENTS—AGENCY.

Though an executor or administrator may collect rents from the real estate, he does so, not in his official capacity, but merely as an agent for the heirs.

6. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §138(4)—SALE OF REALTY—PROVISIONS OF WILL.

Where a will authorized executors to sell realty, but did not absolutely direct a conversion, and the estate was solvent, and there was no necessity to sell realty, an executor's power of sale was to be limited to the ordinary purposes incident to settling the estate, and the executor's power over the realty would not be indefinitely extended.

7. WILLS §728 — STATUS OF EXECUTOR — MANAGEMENT OF ESTATE.

Where a named executor, by consent of others interested under the will, continued to manage common property for 18 years, he was acting merely as agent.

8. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT §60(1)—DUTY OF AGENT.

An executor, acting as agent for other persons interested under a will in the management of common property, was bound to act in good faith and with loyalty to his principals, and could not deal with the property, so as to make a profit out of it, without disclosing the circumstances to his principals.

9. TENANCY IN COMMON §81—MANAGEMENT BY COTENANT—DUTY.

An executor, as tenant in common of property devised by will, not sustaining the relation of agent for his cotenants, except as expressly or impliedly agreed between himself and his cotenants, owed no higher duty than to refrain from profiting himself without disclosing the circumstances to his cotenants.

Stewart, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Bill for an accounting by Elizabeth Y. Kreis and another against Alfred B. Cartledge. From a decree dismissing the bill on final hearing, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MES- TREZAT, POTTER, STEWART, MOSCH- ZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

R. D. Brown, of Philadelphia, for appel- lants. Lewis Lawrence Smith, of Philadel- phia, for appellee.

FRAZER, J. Thomas Cartledge died in 1898 leaving a will in which he gave to his son, Alfred B. Cartledge, his one-half interest in a partnership engaged in business under the name of Pennock Bros. The remainder of his real and personal estate he distribut- ed, one-third to his wife for life, with re- mainder to his daughter, Elizabeth Kreis, and son, Alfred B. Cartledge, in equal parts; the other two-thirds to the above-named daughter and son, appointing the latter ex- ecutors with power "to sell any or all of my real estate at public or private sale upon such terms as they shall deem most advanta- geous." Among the property belonging to testator's estate was his one-half interest in the real estate, No. 1514 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, occupied by the firm of Pen- nock Bros. Following the death of testator, the widow and executors joined with the survivor of the old firm in executing a lease of these premises from June 8 to August 1, 1908, to Alfred B. Cartledge and J. L. Pen- nock, new partners in the firm of Pennock Bros., at the annual rental of $3,000, and also the payment of interest on a mortgage on the demised premises, together with taxes and water rent. The lease contained a pro- vision that in absence of a notice of termina- tion at the end of the term it should continue in force from year to year until ended by 30 days' notice, by either party, previous to the expiration of a current term. The active work incident to settlement of the estate was left to defendant, Alfred B. Cartledge, and no formal account was filed by the executors, nor was the estate divided between the par- ties; it being treated as a whole by mutual consent and the income apportioned.

Defendant attended to the business affairs of the family and collected rents from the various properties, including that leased to Pennock Bros. No claim is made that his accounts were not properly kept or the pro- ceeds fully accounted for. The lease to the partnership continued to run for a period of 18 years without change of terms. In the meantime the property had greatly enhanced in value, and plaintiffs now contend the rental paid since 1901 was totally inadequate and seek to procure payment from defendant for one-half the difference between the rental value received and what they contend would be a fair rental of the property based on the increased market value; their theory being that defendant occupied toward them a relationship of trust, which imposed on him the duty to suggest an increase in rent by the firm of which he was a member, and, in failing to do so, profits by his wrong to an extent represented by his one-half interest in the partnership. Plaintiffs contend further that defendant, having acted in the capacity of executor, the burden was on him to show he exercised the degree of care and business judgment in conducting the affairs of the estate a prudent business man would exercise in the management of his individual property. The court below excluded evidence to show increase of rental value and dismissed the bill, from which action this appeal was taken.

[1, 2] That the lease when made was reasonable and called for a fair rental based on value at that time is undisputed; also that, while plaintiffs left the management of their affairs to defendant, they received notice of an increase in the assessment of the property for taxable purposes, were regularly consulted with regard to the matters in which they were jointly interested, accounts submitted to them and settlement made each year, and no request was made by them at any time for an increased rental. Although the lease was signed by the son and daughter as executors of their father's estate, they had no control over the realty as such. While real estate belonging to a partnership is considered personalty for partnership purposes, it is realty so far as the heirs and legal representatives of the partners are concerned. Haeberly's Appeal, 191 Pa. 239, 43 Atl. 207. Furthermore, it does not appear from the record that the real estate in question though owned by the former partners jointly, was held by them for partnership purposes and in absence of such evidence we must presume it was not partnership property. Shafer's Appeal, 106 Pa. 49.

[3-5] Aside from this question the old firm was dissolved, the business given over to the sons of the former partners, and the realty retained; so that, even if it were formerly partnership property, it ceased to be such on the dissolution of the old firm, consequently, for the present purposes, it must be considered realty. In absence of necessity, such as sale for payment of debts, and on default of express provision in the will, an executor or administrator as such is without authority or control over the realty belonging to the estate. Such property descends directly to the heirs, or to the persons designated in the will of testator. Although an executor or administrator may undertake to collect rents received from real estate, he does so, not in his official capacity, but merely as agent for the heirs. Penna. Co. for Ins., etc., Appeal, 168 Pa. 431, 32 Atl. 25, 47 Am. St. Rep. 898; Herron v. Stevenson, 259 Pa. 354, 102 Atl. 1049.

[6] In this case the will contained a provision authorizing the executors to sell real property belonging to the estate; there is, however, no absolute direction to sell sufficient to amount to a conversion of the realty, and no sale has been made, nor did necessity for sale arise. The estate was solvent and the personal property sufficient to satisfy all liabilities. Neither did the will contain a trust, or other provision, whereby it might be inferred the power of sale was intended to continue indefinitely, and we find nothing in the case imposing upon defendant the duties or obligations of an executor with reference to the property in question. Under such circumstances, the power of sale must be limited to the ordinary purposes incident to the settlement of the estate, and will not be construed as extending the power of the executors over the real estate for an indefinite period. Penna. Co. for Ins., etc., Appeal, supra; Eberly v. Koller, 200 Pa. 296, 58 Atl. 558.

[7-9] Defendant in continuing to act for the others in the care and management of the common property for a period of 18 years was acting merely as agent. As such he was bound to act in good faith and with loyalty to his principal, and could not be permitted to deal with the subject-matter of his agency, so as to make a profit out of it without disclosing all the circumstances to his principal. Everhart v. Searle, 71 Pa. 256; Persch v. Quiggle, 57 Pa. 247; Wilkinson v. McCullough, 196 Pa. 205, 46 Atl. 375, 79 Am. St. Rep. 702; 2 O. J. 694, § 854. The court below found there was no evidence of concealment or fraud on his part. Plaintiffs were aware defendant's interest as a member of the lessee firm was antagonistic to theirs as landlord, had ample opportunity during the 18 years to discover for themselves whether or not a fair income was being realized from the property, in view of the increase in valuation subsequent to the date of the lease, and, if not, terminate it at the end of an annual period. No higher duty was imposed upon defendant as tenant in common since, in that capacity, he did not sustain the relation of agent to the others, except so far as was expressly or impliedly agreed between them. Caveny v. Curtis, 257 Pa. 576, 101 Atl. 853.

The judgment is affirmed.

STEWART, J., dissents.

1. RAILROADS — 350(7)—CROSSING ACCIDENT—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In action for death of plaintiff's husband in a crossing accident, held, on the evidence, that defendant's negligence in not sounding whistle or ringing bell when its train approached crossing, and in not keeping a headlight burning, was for jury.

2. RAILROADS — 328(8)—CROSSING ACCIDENT—NEGLIGENCE.

The driver of an automobile, running it so near a track as to collide with a passing train without having stopped to look and listen, was negligent; the darkness at the time being no excuse.

3. NEGLIGENCE — 98(1) — IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE—BAILEE OF AUTOMOBILE.

That plaintiff's husband, killed at a grade crossing, and a friend driving plaintiff's automobile as a bailee, were engaged in the common purpose of an automobile trip, would not of itself cause the negligence of one to be imputed to the other.

4. NEGLIGENCE — 136(30)—IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In action for death of plaintiff's husband in a crossing accident, held, on the evidence, that whether the one driving the automobile or deceased, to whose wife it belonged, had actual control of the automobile, was for the jury.

5. RAILROADS — 327(12) — CROSSING ACCIDENT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — PASSENGER IN AUTOMOBILE.

Passenger in automobile, who knowingly and without protest suffers driver to drive upon railroad crossing without stopping to look and listen, is negligent, as he is bound to use reasonable care to protect himself, and so far as he knows or could discover approaching danger to warn the driver.

6. RAILROADS — 350(21) — CROSSING ACCIDENT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — QUESTION FOR JURY.

Whether deceased, riding in an automobile driven by another, was bound to know of the existence of a crossing, and if he did discover it, and saw first an approaching train, whether he should have kept a sharper lookout, or have done anything more than warn the driver, held for the jury.

7. RAILROADS — 327(12) — CROSSING ACCIDENT — DUTY OF PASSENGER IN AUTOMOBILE.

While the fixed duty to stop, look, and listen before going upon a railroad track applies to the driver under all circumstances, the duty of calling upon him to do so devolves upon a passenger only where he has knowledge of the crossing.

8. RAILROADS — 327(12) — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—PASSENGER IN AUTOMOBILE.

The extent to which suggestions should be made by a passenger to a chauffeur depends upon the circumstances, and the duty of one passenger may differ from that of another, though each must exercise ordinary care for his safety.

9. TRIAL — 191(8)—INSTRUCTION — ASSUMPTION OF FACT.

Where a locomotive so violently struck an automobile as to crush the skull of a man seated therein and to throw him to the ground, almost instantly killing him, it was not error for trial judge to tell jury that on the testimony they might find that death resulted from collision.

band in a crossing accident, declarations of a member of the automobile party, made three-quarters of an hour after the accident, were properly rejected as too remote to constitute a part of the res gesta.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Adams County.

Trespass by Annie K. Eline against the Western Maryland Railway Company for the death of plaintiff's husband. Verdict for plaintiff for $10,000, judgment thereon, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCH-ZISKER, FRAZER, WALLING, and SIMPSON, JJ.

Richard E. Cochran and George S. Schmidt, both of York, and Charles S. Duncan, of Gettysburg, for appellant. J. Donald Swope, of Gettysburg, and J. Cookman Boyd, of Baltimore, Md., for appellee.

WALLING, J. This action in trespass is for the death of plaintiff's husband, J. Frank Eline, resulting from a grade crossing accident. Mr. and Mrs. Eline resided at Baltimore, and he, being in ill health, spent the summer of 1913 on a farm about 15 miles from that city. While there an automobile trip was arranged for himself and four gentlemen friends, including Frank D. Rogers, to be taken in Mrs. Eline's car. Mr. Rogers and the Elines were intimate friends, and he often went driving with them in her car, and on such occasions uniformly acted as chauffeur; Mr. Eline being unable to do so. According to the evidence for plaintiff, she loaned the car to Mr. Rogers for the proposed trip, placing it entirely in his charge, so as to constitute him a bailee thereof. This was because of her husband's ill health and lack of ability to manage the car. The party started on the morning of September 12, 1913, drove to Harper's Ferry, from there to Emmitsburg, and arrived at Gettysburg the next day, where they spent some time, and in the afternoon left for York, passing through Abbottstown. About 7:45 p. m. they came to Smyser's Crossing, where defendant's track crossed the turnpike at grade. Mr. Rogers was then driving the car, which he had done during the entire trip, and they were all giving attention to the movements of the car and to whatever might promote the safety of the journey; Mr. Eline more especially so, as he sat by the driver and was cautiously looking ahead. They crossed a culvert about 60 feet before reaching the track; the automobile was moving some 10 or 12 miles per hour, and the darkness there was increased by a mist or fog. The deceased was the first to discover a passenger train approaching from their right and gave immediate alarm, which Mr. Rogers heeded and turned the automobile suddenly to one side, but not in time to avoid a collision by which Mr. Eline was killed. There was no light on defendant's engine, and no warning signals given. According to defendant's evidence the headlight was burning, proper crossing signals were given both by whistle and bell, and it was a bright moonlight night, and those in the automobile had an unobstructed view of the track and approaching train. The trial judge submitted the case to the jury, and later entered judgment for plaintiff on the verdict, from which defendant appealed.

[1] We have carefully examined the assignments of error and entire record, but find no reversible error. The four surviving occupants of the automobile, as witnesses for plaintiff, positively asserted that neither whistle was blown nor bell rung to warn of the train's approach, and also that the headlight was not burning. This was more than negative testimony, and, although contradicted, made the question of defendant's negligence one of fact for the jury. Winterbottom v. Philadelphia Ry. Co., 217 Pa. 574, 66 Atl. 864; Buckman v. Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co., 232 Pa. 351, 81 Atl. 332.

[2-4] Mr. Rogers, in driving the car so near the track as to collide with the passing train without having stopped to look and listen, was clearly negligent. The duty to so stop is unbending, and darkness is no excuse for failure to perform it. Anspach v. Philadelphia, etc., Ry. Co., 225 Pa. 528, 74 Atl. 373, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 382. But there was competent evidence, which the jury credited, that he was bailee of this car and had exclusive control of it, and was not the servant of Mr. or Mrs. Eline, and, if true, Rogers' negligence would not defeat plaintiff's action. The fact that Eline and Rogers were engaged in a common purpose would not of itself cause the negligence of one to be imputed to the other. See Dunlap v. Philadelphia R. T. Co., 248 Pa. 130, 93 Atl. 873. Under the evidence, it was a question for the jury whether Mr. Rogers or the deceased had actual control of the automobile; while the latter suggested the route, it does not appear that he dictated the manner of driving the car. A man riding in a car is not liable for its management because owned by his wife, if at the time it is in the possession and control of another as bailee. Neither is the negligence of the bailee under such circumstances imputable to the owner of the car. See Gibson v. Bessemer & L. E. R. R. Co., 226 Pa. 198, 75 Atl. 194, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 689, 18 Ann. Cas. 535.

[5, 6] Mr. Eline was responsible for his own negligence, even if riding in a vehicle driven and controlled by Rogers. A passenger who, having opportunity, fails to warn the driver of a known danger, and to protest against incurring it, is guilty of negligence. It was Mr. Eline's duty to use reasonable care and watchfulness for the protection of himself and his companions, and, so far as he knew of or could discover approaching danger, to warn the driver. If he knew they were approaching this grade crossing, or by the exercise of reasonable care should have known it, in time to warn Mr. Rogers thereof, and failed to do so, he was negligent. In other words, a passenger who, knowingly and without protest, suffers the chauffeur to drive an automobile upon a railroad track without stopping to look and listen, is negligent. See Hardie v. Barrett, 257 Pa. 42, 101 Atl. 75, L. R. A. 1917F, 444; Kunkle v. Lancaster County, 219 Pa. 52, 67 Atl. 918; Trumbower v. Lehigh Valley T. Co., 235 Pa. 397, 84 Atl. 403; Township of Crescent v. Anderson, 114 Pa. 643, 8 Atl. 379, 60 Am. Rep. 367; Winner v. Oakland Township, 158 Pa. 405, 27 Atl. 1110, 1111. The duty of giving warning depends upon the knowledge of the passenger, whether acquired at the time or previously. There is no presumption that Mr. Eline knew in advance of the crossing, but Mr. Rogers says he and the deceased had been over this road together about five times. Assuming the truth of that statement, which was for the jury, yet there is nothing to show when or under what circumstances that occurred; whether they had passed over the road one year before, or many, or whether by day or night, does not appear. So, while Mr. Eline might be assumed to know there were grade crossings on this road, it cannot be affirmed as matter of law that he was bound to know at his peril that there was one down by the culvert where the mist had gathered; that was a matter for the jury. As plaintiff's evidence indicates that neither the track nor train could be seen on that occasion, except at close range, and that the deceased was watching, and was the first to discover and warn of the danger, whether he should have kept a sharper lookout or done something more was for the jury. The evidence is that at the beginning of the trip he had cautioned all the members of the party to keep a lookout for railroad crossings.

[7, 8] While the fixed duty to stop, look, and listen before going upon a railroad track applies to the driver under all circumstances, yet the duty of calling upon him to do so devolves upon the passenger only where he has knowledge of the crossing. See Wanner v. Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co., 104 Atl. 570, and Azinger v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 105 Atl. 87 (decided at this term); also Wachsmith v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 233 Pa. 465, 82 Atl. 755, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 679; Senft v. Western Maryland Ry. Co., 246 Pa. 446, 92 Atl. 553. In Brommer v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 179 Fed. 577, 103 C. O. A. 135, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 924, the plaintiff, who was held legally guilty of negligence in failing to warn the driver, not only sat by him, but actually saw and knew of the crossing. And in Vocca v. P. R. R. Co., 259 Pa. 42, 102 Atl. 283, plaintiff's evidence was that he did warn the chauffeur, and we held the question of his contributory negligence was for the jury.

The extent to which suggestions should be made to the chauffeur depends upon the circumstances, and the duty of one passenger as to that may differ from that of another, while each must exercise ordinary care for his own safety.

[9] When a locomotive so violently collided with an automobile as to crush the skull of a man seated therein and throw him to the ground, where a moment later he is found dead, it is not error for the trial judge to tell the jury that, "the death, I think, from the testimony, you can clearly find was the result of the collision."

[10] The alleged declarations of a member of the automobile party, made three-quarters of an hour after the accident, were properly rejected as too remote to constitute a part of the res gestæ. Briggs v. Railroad & Coal Co., 206 Pa. 564, 56 Atl. 36.

The case was carefully tried and well considered by the court below, and there is nothing further that seems to require discussion.

The assignments of error are overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

(263 Pa. 21)

WINGERT v. PHILADELPHIA & R. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. July 17, 1918.)

1. RAILROADS — §312(3) — CROSSING — SIGNALS.

A railroad is bound to give reasonable warning of the approach of a train towards a crossing.

2. RAILROADS — §350(7) — CROSSING ACCIDENT — WARNING — QUESTION FOR JURY.

In action for death of plaintiff's wife, and for injury to plaintiff and his automobile, resulting from a crossing collision, held, on the evidence, that whether ringing of bell was a sufficient warning, and whether a whistle should have been blown sufficient to give earlier warning of approaching train, was for jury.

3. RAILROADS — §327(7) — CROSSINGS — CARE REQUIRED.

One approaching a railroad crossing in an automobile is bound to look as he approaches, after stopping, but is not required to again stop before crossing.

4. RAILROADS — §350(31) — CROSSING ACCIDENT — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

In action for death of plaintiff's wife, and for injury to plaintiff and his automobile, resulting from a crossing accident, held, on the evidence, that plaintiff's contributory negligence in starting his car ahead after backing on the track was for the jury.

5. RAILROADS — §334 — CROSSING ACCIDENT — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — EMERGENCY.

Where plaintiff, who had backed his automobile upon a crossing before discovering the approaching train, instead of backing across, started ahead, he would not be responsible for failure to exercise the best judgment, as he was confronted with a sudden emergency.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Cumberland County.

Trespass by Daniel H. Wingert against the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Company for the death of plaintiff's wife, injury to plaintiff, and damage to his automobile. Verdict for plaintiff for $4,200, and judgment thereon, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCHZISER, FRAZER, WALLING, and SIMPSON, JJ.

J. W. Wetzel, of Carlisle, for appellant. Edmund O. Wingert, of Chambersburg, Joseph P. McKeehan, of Carlisle, and D. Edward Long, of Chambersburg, for appellee.

FRAZER, J. This action is to recover damages for injuries sustained by plaintiff as the result of a collision between his automobile and defendant's train at a grade crossing. In the court below one of the questions in dispute was whether or not the crossing was private, or a permissive public one. This question, however, the jury found in favor of plaintiff, and we find no complaint here as to the propriety of the action of the court in submitting it to them. The negligence of defendant and contributory negligence of plaintiff were also submitted to the jury. A verdict was rendered in favor of plaintiff, and the subsequent motion for judgment for defendant non obstante veredicto was refused. The questions for consideration are the sufficiency of evidence of negligence on the part of defendant to submit to the jury, and whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

At the time of the accident plaintiff was driving an automobile in which were his wife, son, and three other passengers. The road on which he approached the crossing is a narrow one, and, after crossing the tracks, ascends a grade at the opposite side to reach the level of the adjoining land. There are two tracks of the railroad, both of which plaintiff crossed in safety. He was, however, owing to the almost impassable condition of the road, unable to ascend the grade on the opposite side, and, the road being of insufficient width to permit the car to be turned, was obliged to return to the main road, and to do so was required to back the automobile across the tracks. Plaintiff testified that before reversing the car he stopped, opened the side curtains, and looked and listened at a point 6 feet from the nearest or east-bound track, from which place he had an unobstructed view of the railroad for a distance of approximately 641 feet in the direction from which the train approached. At that distance from the crossing was a curve in the railroad, which, in connection with the embankment along the side, obstructed a further view of the track. Plaintiff stated he neither saw nor heard a train, and proceeded to back the car across the nearest track, and, when about the middle of the second or west-bound track, he first saw the train approaching around the curve. Being of opinion danger could be more readily avoided by going forward, instead of backward, he reversed the direction of his car, and had almost cleared the track, when the train crashed into the rear end of the automobile.

[1, 2] It is conceded no whistle was blown; defendant's evidence, however, is that the bell was rung when the train was in the neighborhood of 100 yards from the crossing. This is denied by plaintiff and by his son, who was sitting with him on the front seat of the automobile, both testifying that, had the bell been rung, they would have heard it. Defendant contends this testimony was merely negative, and entitled to no weight against the positive evidence of defendant's witnesses to the contrary. Discussion of this point, however, is unnecessary, since, conceding the bell was rung, the question whether or not, under the circumstances, this was sufficient warning, was for the jury. Defendant's duty was to give reasonable warning of the approach of its train, and we cannot say, as matter of law, that the ringing of a bell at the distance of 100 yards from the crossing was adequate warning under the particular circumstances. According to the testimony of plaintiff, he saw the train as it rounded the curve, a greater distance from the point at which defendant's witnesses testified the bell was first rung, and yet was unable to avoid the collision. It might, therefore, be it was not rung in time to serve as ample warning to persons using the crossing; at all events, it was for the jury to say whether the warning was ample, and if a whistle should have been blown at a distance from the crossing sufficient to give earlier warning of the approaching train. Longenecker v. Penna. R. R., 105 Pa. 328, 333; Penna. v. Coon, 111 Pa. 430, 439, 3 Atl. 234.

[3-5] Neither can it be said, as matter of law, that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. He stopped at a point 6 feet from the nearest track, and, neither seeing nor hearing the approaching train, began backing his automobile across the tracks. Although it was his duty to continue to look as he approached, there is no rule of law requiring him to again stop before entering the crossing (Witmer v. Railroad, 241 Pa. 112, 88 Atl. 314); besides he was obliged to watch the rear end of his car to avoid running from the roadway, and whether, under the circumstances, he did everything required of a reasonably prudent man, was for the jury. In view of the distance from the curve to the crossing, and the slow speed at which plaintiff was necessarily required to drive backward, and of the necessity of having his attention divided between a possible approaching train and the guiding of his car, it may be that the train, though not in view at the time he stopped, looked, and listened, rounded the curve immediately after plaintiff began to move backward across the track, and was not noticed by him until shortly after it appeared in view, at which time it was too late to avoid the collision. Schwartz v. Railroad, 211 Pa. 625, 629, 61 Atl. 255; Cromley v. Railroad, 208 Pa. 445, 448, 57 Atl. 832; Cromley v. Railroad, 211 Pa. 429, 432, 60 Atl. 1007. While it may be, had plaintiff continued backing his car after he saw the train approaching, instead of stopping to reverse and proceed in the opposite direction, the accident might have been avoided; yet he was confronted with a sudden emergency, and cannot be held responsible for failure to exercise the best judgment. Phillips v. Railroad, 190 Pa. 222, 42 Atl. 686; Marfilus v. Railroad, 227 Pa. 281, 75 Atl. 1072.

The judgment is affirmed.

(263 Pa. 25)

CARBAUGH v. PHILADELPHIA & R. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. July 17, 1918.)

1. NEGLIGENCE — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE.

Plaintiff's deceased wife, a passenger in an automobile struck by a train at a grade crossing, could not be declared to have been guilty of contributory negligence in joining with driver in testing a manifest danger, where verdict for driver in his action against railroad established that he stopped, looked, and listened, and that no train was in sight or hearing.

2. RAILROADS — CROSSING ACCIDENT — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — PASSENGER IN AUTOMOBILE.

A passenger in an automobile, who saw or was bound to see an approaching train, which driver also saw, was not bound to interfere with operation of car, where that might have only served to increase the danger.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Cumberland County.

Trespass by Cyrus A. Carbaugh against the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Company for the death of plaintiff's wife. Verdict for plaintiff for $2,500, and judgment thereon, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCH-ZISKER, FRAZER, WALLING, and SIMPSON, JJ.

J. W. Wetzel, of Carlisle, for appellant. Edmund C. Wingerd, of Chambersburg, Joseph P. McKeehan, of Carlisle, and D. Edward Long, of Chambersburg, for appellee.

FRAZER, J. [1] This suit arose out of the accident referred to and described in the opinion in Wingert v. Philadelphia & Reading Railway Co., 104 Atl. 859, herewith filed. Plaintiff is the husband of Mrs. Carbaugh, one of the victims of the accident, who was riding in the automobile driven by Wingert, the plaintiff in the case above men-defendant contends deceased failed in her duty to look and listen for an approaching train, and thereby joined with the driver in testing a danger certainly apparent to her had she exercised due care. The verdict in the action by the driver of the automobile against this defendant, which was tried with the present suit, establishes the fact that he stopped, looked, and listened, and that no train at the time was within sight or hearing; hence there was no manifest danger to test.

[2] Assuming, however, deceased saw or was bound to see the approaching train at the moment it rounded the curve, the driver also saw it, and there was neither occasion nor necessity for interference by her with the operation of the car, and to have done so might only have served to increase the danger. Vocca v. Railroad, 259 Pa. 42, 102 Atl. 283.

The judgment is affirmed.

(262 Pa. 9)

KANAWELL et al. v. MILLER et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. July 17, 1918.)

1. DEEDS ¶208(7)—DELIVERY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In ejectment, where defendant, a nephew of decedent's wife and a member of his family, claimed as grantee under a deed from decedent, evidence as to delivery of the deed in decedent's lifetime held to sustain verdict for defendant.

2. DEEDS ¶194(1) — DELIVERY — PRESUMPTION.

While "the crowning fact" in the execution of a deed is delivery, yet it is not necessary to prove "actual manual investiture," since "delivery may be inferred or presumed from circumstances."

3. DEEDS ¶56(2)—DELIVERY—EVIDENCE.

Delivery may be made by words alone, or by acts alone, or by both together; but there must be sufficient to show an intention to pass the title.

4. DEEDS ¶194(3)—DELIVERY—PRESUMPTION AND BURDEN OF PROOF.

Proof of a deed to defendant, duly acknowledged and recorded, placed the title and right of possession prima facie in him; but the burden of proof shifted to him to show a delivery in grantor's lifetime, when it appeared that deed was found in grantor's safe, unrecorded, after grantor's death.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶589—STATEMENT—CONSIDERATION OF COURTS.

The appellate courts are required to consider only points covered by the statement of questions involved.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Snyder County.

Ejectment for recovery of land in Snyder county by J. Luther Kanawell and others against Charles A. Miller and another. Verdict for defendants, and judgment thereon, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, WALLING, and SIMPSON, JJ.

drawn A. Leiser, of Lewisburg, Jay G. Weiser, of Middleburg, and Andrew A. Leiser, Jr., of Lewisburg, for appellees.

MOSCHZISKER, J. This is an action of ejectment. Judgment was entered on a verdict for defendants and plaintiffs have appealed.

Plaintiffs are the legal heirs of Dr. J. F. Kanawell, deceased. Charles A. Miller (hereinafter called the defendant) claims the real estate in suit as grantee of decedent; the other defendant, Fred. Musser, is a tenant under Miller. In view of the verdict, the following facts may be accepted as established:

In 1893, Dr. Kanawell purchased the farm sought to be recovered in this action. The defendant, a nephew of decedent's first wife lived in the household of the doctor, and was treated by him as though he were a son. In 1897, Dr. Kanawell, in consideration of "one dollar and natural love and affection," executed and acknowledged a deed for the farm to Miller, when the latter was but six years old. Subsequently this document was inclosed in an unsealed envelope, indorsed "Charles A. Miller," in the grantor's handwriting, and put in a safe in the doctor's office. From childhood on, the defendant had access to this safe, knew the combination, and frequently opened it. In 1905, Dr. Kanawell called upon a nephew, with whom he was intimate, and told the latter that, if anything happened to him (the doctor), "at any time," the nephew and Miller "should open his safe, and in there we would find papers, one addressed to myself [the nephew] and one to Charley [Miller]. The first he gave me to understand was Charley's deed, and the other was a will." At the time of this interview, the doctor said "the deed was Charley's," that the latter had the combination of the safe, and when the safe was opened the deed was to be "handed to Charley." In 1909 Dr. Kanawell made a will purporting to dispose of his entire estate, real and personal. Several pieces of real property are mentioned in this will, but the farm here in question is entirely omitted therefrom, as it is from two subsequent codicils executed February 28, 1914, and November 8, 1915, respectively, on which latter date the doctor died. The executor was obliged to obtain the services of Miller to open decedent's safe, and, when this was accomplished, the deed was found therein, indorsed as already stated. The executor placed the instrument upon record. Defendant offered to prove the deed had been actually delivered to him by Dr. Kanawell during the latter's life, and had been handed back to the grantor, with the request that he keep it in his safe as custodian for the grantee. This offer was rejected, and, for present purposes, should be considered as much out of the case as though never made. Therefore defendant must point to other competent evidence sufficient to sustain the verdict and judgment in his favor. To meet this burden, he stands, first, upon the duly executed, acknowledged, and recorded deed itself, which, on its face, purports to have been "delivered"; next, he points to the evidence in support of the facts which we have already recited, and, in addition, to repeated declarations by the grantor, at intervals extending over many years (some in the presence and hearing of the grantee, and others in his absence), to the effect that he bought the farm for Miller, that it belonged to the latter, that he (the doctor) did not own it, but was only the overseer for defendant, and, finally, to many acts indicating ownership by Miller and acquiescence therein by decedent. Moreover, defendant directs attention to the fact that the testimony shows, not a mere direction of the grantor that the deed should be delivered after his death, with a statement or intimation that he would retain title during his own life (as in some of the cited cases), but rather what can justifiably be found to be an acknowledgment that the property then belonged to the grantee, and that, if "anything" happened to him, the grantor, the deed was to be taken by the grantee, not as a delivery at that time, but because it already was his; that is to say, the grantor's several declarations are not simply to the effect that the land and the deed were to be, but that they, respectively, actually "were," the grantee's property.

[1] Appellants correctly state the question involved thus: "Was there any evidence in the case showing that said deed was delivered to the grantee named therein in the grantor's lifetime?" In view of the foregoing facts, this determining question must be answered in the affirmative. There are two lines of cases dealing with the delivery of deeds, duly executed, but found apparently in the unqualified possession of the grantor at the time of his death. In one, the delivery is held to have been sufficiently proved. Stinger v. Commonwealth, 26 Pa. 422, 428; Stephens v. Huss, 54 Pa. 20, 22, 26; Stephens v. Rinehart, 72 Pa. 434, 440, 441; Holt's Appeal, 98 Pa. 257, 270; Turner v. Warren, 160 Pa. 336, 343, 28 Atl. 781; Cummings v. Glass, 162 Pa. 241, 251, et seq., 29 Atl. 848; Wagoner's Estate, 174 Pa. 558, 564, 34 Atl. 114, 32 L. R. A. 766, 52 Am. St. Rep. 828; Kern v. Howell, 180 Pa. 315, 321, 322, 36 Atl. 872, 57 Am. St. Rep. 641; Chase v. Clearfield Lumber Co., 213 Pa. 46, 48, 62 Atl. 172; Clymer v. Groff, 220 Pa. 580, 584, 69 Atl. 1119, 14 Ann. Cas. 256. Also see what is said upon the subject in hand by Sharswood, J., in Pa. Co., etc., v. Dovey, 64 Pa. 260, 266, 267, and by Thompson, J., in Diehl v. Emig, 65 Pa. 320, 327, citing Blight v. Schenck, 10 Pa. 285, 51 Am. Dec. 478. In the other, delivery is held not to have been sufficiently proved. Critchfield v. Critchfield, 24 Pa. 100, 103; Du-raind's Appeal, 116 Pa. 93, 102, 8 Atl. 922; Benedick v. Benedick, 187 Pa. 351, 355, 41 Atl. 40; Cameron v. Gray, 202 Pa. 566, 567, 569, 52 Atl. 132; Sears v. Scranton Trust Co., 228 Pa. 126, 134, 138, et seq., 77 Atl. 423, 20 Ann. Cas. 1145; Herroun v. Graham, 258 Pa. 245, 101 Atl. 985. Albeit, owing to differences of fact, none of the authorities cited can be held to rule the present case, yet relevant general principles are stated and discussed in all of them.

[2, 3] While "the crowning fact" in the execution of a deed is delivery, yet it is not necessary to prove "actual manual investiture," since "delivery may be inferred or presumed from circumstances." Rigler v. Cloud, 14 Pa. 361, 364. "Delivery may be made by words alone, or by acts alone, or by both together; but there must be sufficient to show an intention to pass the title." Dayton v. Newman, 19 Pa. 194, 199.

[4] When the deed to defendant, duly acknowledged and recorded, was proved, this, prima facie, placed the title and right of possession in him. Kern v. Howell, supra, 180 Pa. 316, 317, 36 Atl. 872, 57 Am. St. Rep. 641; Clymer v. Groff, supra, 220 Pa. 583, 584, 69 Atl. 1119, 14 Ann. Cas. 256; Diehl v. Emig, supra. Then, when it was shown that, after Dr. Kanawell's death, the deed, unrecorded, was found in the latter's safe, the burden shifted, and it became the duty of defendant to establish a delivery in the lifetime of the grantor; but, as indicated by the authorities already cited, to do this it was not necessary for the grantee to prove the actual handing of the deed to him by the grantor, so long as sufficient circumstances were shown, by the weight of clear and satisfactory evidence, reasonably to justify the conclusion that a delivery did, in fact, take place.

In the present instance, it cannot justifiably be said that the burden resting upon the defendants was not fully sustained within the requirements of our decisions upon the subject; the question of delivery was for the jury (Steel v. Tuttle, 15 Serg. & B. 210, 217, 218; Galbraith v. Zimmerman, 100 Pa. 374, 377), and it was found against plaintiffs. The judgment entered on the verdict will not be disturbed.

[5] We have determined the sole point called to our attention by the statement of "question involved," which is all that is required of us. Kennedy v. Rothrock, 104 Atl. 746, not yet officially reported, and cases there cited. All the assignments have been examined, however, and, while they will not be discussed specifically, nothing appears therein which, considering the record as a whole, demonstrates reversible error.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR — 357(1)—TIME FOR APPEAL—POWER OF COURT—HARDSHIP.

Where an act of assembly fixes the time within which an appeal shall be taken, courts have no power to extend it to allow the act to be done at a later day, and something more than mere hardship is necessary to justify an extension, or its equivalent, an allowance of the act nunc pro tunc.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR — 353 — TIME FOR TAKING APPEAL—FRAUD.

Where a party has been prevented from appealing by fraud, or wrongful or negligent act of court official, court may extend time for appeal; but, where no fraud or anything equivalent thereto is shown, such appeals cannot be allowed.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT — 416—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—APPEAL FROM DECISION OF REFEREE—JURISDICTION OF WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION BOARD.

Under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 419, permitting an appeal from referee's decision to Workmen's Compensation Board only when taken within 10 days after notice of referee's action has been served on parties, the board, where an appeal has not been taken within such time, cannot allow an appeal nunc pro tunc as of a time prior thereto.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT — 417(9)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT — APPEAL FROM REFEREE—REVIEW.

If Workmen's Compensation Board improperly allows appeal from decision of referee, and affirms decision, Common Pleas Court has no jurisdiction upon appeal to reverse referee's decision and dismiss claim.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Crawford County.

Proceeding by Elizabeth Wise against the Borough of Cambridge Springs, brought before the Workmen's Compensation Board, which, on appeal by the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, insurer, affirmed the referee's award to claimant. From an order of the common pleas, reversing the decision of the board and dismissing the claim, claimant appeals. Appeal sustained, and award of referee affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MES-TREZAT, POTTER, STEWART, MOSCH-
ZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Frank J. Thomas and John A. Northam, both of Meadville, for appellant.

J. Roy Dickle, of Pittsburgh, Albert L.
Thomas, of Meadville, and Wm. W. Wishart, of Pittsburgh, for appellee.

BROWN, C. J. In 1916 Roy Wise was a special policeman in the service of the borough of Cambridge Springs, this state. On September 21st of that year an automobile filled with passengers was stalled on a railroad crossing over one of the streets of the borough, and, in attempting to push it off, he was struck by a train, sustaining injuries which resulted in his death. His widow filed a claim against the borough before the taken from this to the board by United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company as insurance carrier, and the award of the referee was affirmed. From the action of the board the insurance carrier and the widow appealed to the court below, while the award to the widow, on the ground that her husband was not an "employee" of the borough within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act. On appeal from the action of the court below affirming her claim, she assigns several grounds for reversal, but only one need be considered as it is conclusive of her right to the award of the referee sustained.

[1-3] The right of appeal to the compensation board from an award or decision of compensation by a referee is given by section 419 of the Workmen's Compensation Act of June 2, 1915 (P. L. 736). If no appeal is taken it would not exist, and it is only if taken "within ten days after notice of the referee's action. In the case of the borough of Cambridge Springs, the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company both appeared by their attorney before the referee in opposition to the claim of the appellant. On December 6, 1917, he filed his award. On the 30th of December—24 days thereafter—the appellant appealed from it by the insurance carrier to the Compensation Board. On January 10, 1917, when the case was called for argument before that board, this appellant moved to have the appeal be stricken off, because the time for taking it had expired. This motion was refused by the board in an opinion filed on the 22nd of the following March, the reason assigned being that it had been "liberally construed" in allowing appeals nunc pro tunc where it appears that one of the parties in interest did not had full notice of the findings of the referee." It is to be noted that the allowance of an appeal from the decision of a referee is not one of the functions of the compensation board. It has nothing to do with the allowance of an appeal, which is a matter left right under the statute, if taken in accordance with its provisions. All that the court has to do with it is to pass upon it when it is properly taken. If the board can allow an appeal nunc pro tunc, there would be no limit to the time within which an appeal could be taken, though the act of assembly limits it.

The right of the insurance carrier to appeal after the statutory period had expired was challenged by the widow of the deceased at the very threshold of the case before the compensation board, and the board could have allowed the appeal nunc pro tunc, it ought not to have done so in view of the testimony taken on the motion to strike off. J. A. Boland, the solicitor of the borough of Cambridge Springs, testified that he had had charge of the proceeding on behalf of the borough; that at the hearing before the referee, E. J. Stetson, a local attorney, appeared for the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, the insurance carrier, and conducted the proceeding for it; that on December 12, 1916, he and the attorney for the insurance carrier received the findings of the referee, and on the 13th or 14th of the same month the said E. J. Stetson came to his office, when he handed him the finding in the matter; that after examining it Stetson handed it back to him; that Stetson, being attorney of record in the case, he considered the notice of the award was properly served on him; that Stetson read the award over, and that they discussed the advisability of taking an appeal or any further action in the case. Here is a distinct statement by the borough solicitor, not questioned by the attorney for the insurance carrier, that it had notice through him of the award more than 15 days before its appeal was taken, and as it was too late to be of any avail the Compensation Board was powerless to recognize it.

"Where a statute fixes the time within which an act must be done, as, for example, an appeal taken, courts have no power to extend it, or to allow the act to be done at a later day, as a matter of indulgence. Something more than mere hardship is necessary to justify an extension of time, or its equivalent, an allowance of the act nunc pro tunc." Schrenkeisen et al. v. Kishbaugh, Coslett et al., 162 Pa. 45, 29 Atl. 284.

In Singer v. Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co., 254 Pa. 502, 98 Atl. 1059, the court allowed an appeal from the report of a board of viewers in condemnation proceedings more than thirty days after it had been filed. A motion by the railroad company to strike it off was refused, and an issue framed, which resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff in three times the sum awarded her by the viewers. On appeal from the judgment entered on the verdict the sole question was as to the power of the court to allow the appeal from the report of viewers more than thirty days after it had been filed. In holding that it possessed no such power, we said, in reversing the judgment in favor of the plaintiff:

"Act April 9, 1856 (P. L. 288) § 3, provides that, 'upon the report of said viewers, or any four of them, being filed in said court, either party, within thirty days thereafter, may file his, her or their appeal from said report to the said court.' In the present case the 30 days expired on October 17, 1913, while the appeal was not taken until November 8th. In Harris v. Mercur, 202 Pa. 313, this court, speaking by Mr. Justice Mestrezat, said (page 317 [51 Atl. 969, 971]): 'If we are correct in holding that the act of April 22, 1874 (P. L. 109), required the appellant to file his exceptions within 30 days after he had received notice of the filing of the court's decision, the order of the court below in permitting exceptions to be filed thereafter was without authority and hence without effect or validity. The commands of a statute cannot be waived or dispensed with by a court. They require implicit obedience as well from the court as from its suitors: Jackson ex dem. Bleecker v. Wiseburn, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 136. 'It has been repeatedly held,' says Mr. Sedgwick (Construction of Statutory and Constitutional Law, 277, 2d Ed.), 'that courts have no dispensing power, even in matters of practice, when the Legislature has spoken. Thus, where a statute declares that a judge at chambers may direct a new trial if application is made within ten days after judgment, it has been said that 'he can no more enlarge the time than he can legislate in any other matter.' When a statute fixes the time within which an act must be done, the courts have no power to enlarge it, although it relates to a mere question of practice.'" Under the act of 1856, the period of 30 days allowed for taking an appeal from an award of viewers runs from the date of the filing of the report, not from its confirmation. Gwinner v. Lehigh & Del. Water Gap R. R. Co., 55 Pa. 126. Where a party has been prevented from appealing by fraud, or by the wrongful or negligent act of a court official, it has been held that the court has power to extend the time for taking an appeal. Zeigler's Petition, 207 Pa. 131 [56 Atl. 419]; York County v. Thompson, 212 Pa. 561 [61 Atl. 1024]. But where no fraud or anything equivalent thereto is shown such appeals cannot be allowed. Dunmore Borough School District v. Wahlers, 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 35; Guyer v. Bedford County, 49 Pa. Super. Ct. 60. The mistake or neglect of the attorney for the party desiring to appeal is not sufficient ground for relief: Ward v. Letzkus, 152 Pa. 318, 319 [25 Atl. 773]."

[4] From the time this appellant protested in limine before the Compensation Board that the appeal from the award of the referee had been taken too late, it was prosecuted with due notice of its invalidity, and if that board had no jurisdiction of it—and it certainly had not—the court below had none on appeal from its action.

For the reason stated, this appeal is sustained, and the award of the referee affirmed.

(263 Pa. 320)

OBERLY et al. v. H. C. FRICK COKE CO.
(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. July 17, 1918.)

1. INJUNCTION ⇄ 137(4) — PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION—REFUSAL.

The refusal to grant a preliminary injunction is error only when the right threatened with invasion is unquestioned, and the only protection from irreparable injury is to be found in a court of equity.

2. INJUNCTION ⇄ 163(5) — LESSOR'S USE OF COAL LAND—DISSOLUTION.

Where owner in fee conveyed underlying coal, with necessary rights of mining, removal, etc., and waived damages therefrom, and explosive gas accumulated over strata overlying coal, which could not be removed by ventilation, and owner was about to drill hole to release gas, a preliminary injunction was properly dissolved.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Fayette County.

Bill in equity for injunction by John Oberly and another against the H. C. Frick Coke Company. From the action of the lower court in granting a preliminary injunction, and in thereafter dissolving it, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Reppert, J., filed the following opinion in the common pleas:

Findings of Fact.

I. By deed dated October 19, 1889, recorded in the recorder's office of Fayette county in Deed Book No. 91, page 329, James F. Huestead, the owner of the fee, with his wife, conveyed to Gilbert T. Rafferty and Charles Donnelly all the 9-foot or Connellsville vein of coking coal in and underlying all that certain tract of land situate in North Union Township, in said county, describing it by metes and bounds, containing 109 acres and 46 perches, "together with the free and uninterrupted right of way under said land at such points and in such manner as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of digging, mining, draining, ventilating, and carrying away said coal, hereby waiving all damages arising therefrom or from the removal of all the said coal, together with the privileges of mining and removing through said described premises other coal belonging to said parties of the second part, their heirs and assigns, or which may hereafter be acquired."

II. By sundry mesne conveyances title to the said coal and mining rights became vested in H. C. Frick Coke Company, a corporation of Pennsylvania, defendant, and title to 99 acres and 38 perches of said tract of land, excepting and reserving the said vein of coal and mining rights, became vested in the plaintiffs.

III. On or about February 27, 1918, the defendant entered upon the surface of plaintiffs' land, and began preparations for drilling a bore hole 10 inches in diameter for the purpose of releasing gas from its mines, the coal being about 520 feet beneath the surface.

IV. The Huestead tract of coal is part of defendant's Lemont No. 1 mine and is now being operated as part of the workings of that mine. The coal is transported through the underground workings to an opening on the surface $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles distant. The mines are ventilated by a fan located the same distance from this tract. The current of air from the fan is distributed through the mine. A portion of the Huestead coal has been entirely mined, the supports removed, and falls from the overlying strata, called gob, loosely occupies the space from which the coal has been taken. Explosive gas, endangering the mine and those working therein, caused by the removal of the coal, has accumulated over the gob. It is impossible to reach the accumulation of gas by an air current from the fan. Its removal is necessary to the operation of the mine. It is lighter than air, and the only practicable method of removing it is by a bore hole from the surface to the high point of the gob, thus allowing it to escape. Under such circumstances the law requires that this be done.

V. The superintendent of the mine and the mine inspector of the defendant company testify that the gob from the mining of the coal under the surface of plaintiffs' land causes the accumulation of gas complained of, and that if the defendant was not engaged in mining the coal under that tract the bore hole would not be needed. There is no denial of this testimony and no reason to doubt the facts thus testified to. For the purpose and in the manner above described the bore hole when completed will be a part of the ventilating system of the mine.

Discussion.

The plaintiffs allege that the action and conduct of the defendant in entering upon their land with the object of drilling and maintaining said bore hole are unlawful and without authority or right under the grant of the coal owned and operated by the defendant company.

The rights of the owner of coal, when severed from the surface as to working and surface rights, are thus set forth in the "Law of Mines and Mining," Barringer & Adams, Edition of 1897, page 576:

"It is a general rule of law that, when anything is granted, all the means of attaining it and all the fruits and effects of it are also granted; when uncontrolled by express words of restriction all the powers pass which the law considers to be incident to the grant for the full and necessary enjoyment of it. Consequently, a grant or reservation of mines gives the right to work them, to enter and to mine, unless the language of the grant itself provides otherwise or repels this construction. And this right is so inseparable from a grant of minerals, that not only is it necessarily an implied incident thereof, but it and its derived rights cannot be restrained or excluded by a special affirmative power to do other acts, or by a grant of other privileges necessary or convenient to the working of mines.

"The right to work the mine involves the right to penetrate the surface of the soil for the minerals, to remove them in the manner most advantageous to the mine owner, and to use such means and processes in mining and removing them as may be necessary in the light of modern improvements in the arts and sciences. * * *

"The bare right to work carries with it the right to use so much of the surface as is reasonably necessary. The mine owner has the right to enter and take and hold possession even as against the owner of the soil, and to use the surface so far as may be necessary to carry on the work of mining, even to the exclusion of the owner of the soil. What is necessary and reasonable may be determined by reference to what is customary, and is a question of fact.

"Most frequently the privileges above described as impliedly incident to the right to mine are expressly granted or reserved in the instrument creating a mineral estate; but their character and extent are not altered by this expression, though there may be, of course, express privileges added which would not otherwise be implied. These rights do not create an estate in the surface, but are easements to do certain acts thereon.

"Surface rights and the incidental rights, such as that to use shafts, whether expressed or left to implication, may be used for the purpose only of mining under the particular premises conveyed, and not as a means of removing minerals from other lands. This, of course, may, however, be changed by the terms of the contract."

As we view it, this expression of the law is in harmony with Pennsylvania decisions, as shown by a number of authorities referred to by Mr. Justice Potter in Baker v. Pittsburgh, Carnegie & Western Railroad Co., 219 Pa. 398, 403, 68 Atl. 1014, 1015, where he says:

"As to the other specifications of error, which question the correctness of the ruling of the trial judge that, under the reservation in plaintiff's deed, she had the right to sink a shaft upon the land sold by her for the purpose of mining the coal which she had reserved, we think the court below was clearly right. It is the established law in Pennsylvania. In a recent case, Youghiogheny River Coal Co. v. Allegheny Nat. Bank, 211 Pa. 319, our Brother Mestrezat said (page 324 [60 Atl. 924, 925, 69 L. R. A. 637]): 'If the owner of the whole fee conveys the coal in the land in general terms, retaining the residue of the tract, the purchaser acquires the coal, with the right to mine and remove it, provided he does so without injury to the superincumbent estate.' The undoubted right of the owner of coal to mine and remove it was also expressly recognized in Pringle v. Vesta Coal Co., 172 Pa. 438 [33 Atl. 600], and the principle that 'one who has the exclusive right to mine coal upon a tract of land has the right of possession even as against the owner of the soil, so far as it is necessary to carry on his mining operations' is laid down in Turner v. Reynolds, 23 Pa. 199. See, also, Chartiers Block Coal Co. v. Mellon, 152 Pa. 236 [25 Atl. 597, 18 L. R. A. 702, 34 Am. St. Rep. 645].

"The general rule is stated in 2 Lindley on Mines, § 813, where it is said: 'A grant of minerals implies the right to win them from the underlying soil. The use of some portion of the surface is necessary for the proper enjoyment of this right. To reach the minerals the miner must pass from the surface downward; to do this he has a right of way of necessity. He may sink through such land from the surface to the mines, in order to reach and work them.' And in 2 Sugden on Mines and Mining, § 1003, it is said: 'An express grant of all the minerals and mining rights in a tract of land is by natural implication the grant also of the right to open and work the mines, and to occupy for those purposes as much of the surface as may be reasonably necessary.'"

The removal of gas is a necessary incident to the mining of coal, in order that mining operations may be carried on with safety. It is one of the implied rights incidental to every grant of minerals. The bore hole in controversy is necessary to the proper ventilation of the mine in the coal immediately underlying plaintiffs' land, which coal is now being mined.

Our conclusion is that the preliminary injunction heretofore granted should therefore be dissolved.

The lower court granted a preliminary injunction as prayed for, and thereafter dissolved same. Plaintiffs appealed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, WALLING, and SIMPSON, JJ.

H. S. Dumbauld, of Uniontown, for appellants.

W. J. Sturgis and S. J. Morrow, both of Uniontown, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. [1, 2] The refusal to grant or continue a preliminary injunction is error only when the right threatened with invasion is an unquestionable one, and the only protection from irreparable injury to it is to be found in a court of equity. Crawford v. Sullivan, 238 Pa. 142, 85 Atl. 1090. In view of this rule the court below did not err in refusing to continue the injunction, and its decree dissolving the same is affirmed, at appellants' costs.

(282 Pa. 112)

IN RE HILDEBRAND'S ESTATE.

Appeal of COMMONWEALTH.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. July 17, 1918.)

1. TAXATION — § 866 — INHERITANCE TAX — WIDOW'S EXEMPTION — "ESTATES PASSING BY WILL" — "CLEAR VALUE."

The widow's exemption of $500 granted by Act June 7, 1917 (P. L. 447), is not subject to the direct inheritance tax imposed by Act July 11, 1917 (P. L. 832), making all estates passing by will or under intestate laws taxable at 2 per cent. on "clear value" of estate which is only that which remains after all claims against it have been paid.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Clear Value.]

2. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION — § 53 — EXEMPTION ACTS—CONSTRUCTION.

Exemption acts have been conceived in a spirit favorable to widows, and should receive an interpretation consistent with their conception.

3. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION — § 52(2) — RIGHTS OF WIDOW—NATURE—EXEMPTION.

An exemption act creates an independent bounty, and is of no kin to one of distribution.

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Lancaster County.

The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania appeals from a decree sustaining an appeal from a direct inheritance tax appraisal in the estate of Isaac W. Hildebrand, deceased. Appeal dismissed.

Appeal from direct inheritance tax appraisal.

The facts appear from the following opinion by Smith, P. J., in the orphans' court:

"For the imposition and collection of certain inheritance taxes" an enactment was approved July 11, 1917 (P. L. 832). Concisely, it provides that, "All estates * * * passing from any person * * * either by will or under the intestate laws of this commonwealth * * * are * * * subject to the tax of two ($2) dollars on every hundred dollars of the clear value of such estates." Because of this enactment the commonwealth of Pennsylvania contends that the $500 exemption reserved for a widow by section 12 of the Fiduciaries' Act of 1917 (P. L. 471), subject to the tax, and to accomplish its collection has included it in the prescribed appraisal, and from which this appeal has been taken.

[1-3] Exemption acts have been conceived in a spirit favorable to widows and have received an interpretation consistent with their conception. Lyman v. Byam, 38 Pa. 475; Peebles' Estate, 157 Pa. 605, 27 Atl. 792. Such an act creates an independent bounty, and is of no kin to one of distribution. Compher v. Compher, 25 Pa. 31; Nevins' Appeal, 47 Pa. 230; King's Appeal, 84 Pa. 345; Gilbert's Estate, 227 Pa. 648, 76 Atl. 428; Buckland's Estate, 239 Pa. 608, 86 Atl. 1098.

The commonwealth cannot prevail because the inheritance tax act does not authorize its action. It provides that only "clear value" of a decedent's estate is taxable, and the clear value of an estate is only that which remains after all claims against it have been paid. A widow's exemption is a "preferred claim," and, therefore, must first be met. It is a "gift of the law prompted by considerations of public policy." Beetem & Co. v. Getz, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 71; Peebles' Estate, supra.

An estate that passes "either by will or under the intestate laws" is subject to the tax, but a widow's exemption is not such an estate. It does not come by either of these ways. It is neither a legacy or devise, nor an inheritance. Subject to a purchase-money lien it is preferred to all claims against an estate. By asserting it the amount of it ceases to be regarded as part of a decedent's estate. Against it a decedent's creditors, legatees, devisees, or distributees cannot prevail. Peebles' Estate, supra. The action of a widow properly claiming it distinguishes it as her estate; which had been held in abeyance by her husband during his life. The act says it is something which she may "retain," thus pointedly implying ownership.

Such exemption is a wife's inchoate property right in a husband's estate, which becomes complete when as his widow she sustains her claim for it. It is not subject to the tax imposed on the estate passing from a deceased husband; therefore the appeal is sustained and the appraisal for inheritance tax purposes is reformed by striking $500 from it. Costs to be paid by the commonwealth.

The lower court sustained the appeal and reformed the appraisal by striking the sum of $500 therefrom. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania appealed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCH-ZISKER, FRAZER, WALLING, and SIMPSON, JJ.

William H. Keller, First Deputy Atty. Gen., Francis Shunk Brown, Atty. Gen., and M. E. Musser, of Lancaster, for appellant.

F. Lyman Windolph, O. S. Schaeffer, and J. R. Kinzer, all of Lancaster, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is dismissed, at the costs of the commonwealth, on the opinion of the learned court below disallowing its claim.

(282 Pa. 95)

COULTER v. LINE

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. July 17, 1918.)

1. LIENS \Leftrightarrow 16 — PRESUMPTION OF EXTINGUISHMENT.

Where person claiming payment of charge or lien on realty is unable to show either a claim or demand for payment on owner, or a payment upon or an acknowledgment of existence of lien by owner within 21 years, Act April 27, 1855 (P. L. 369) § 7, raises conclusive presumption of release or extinguishment of demand, and makes it irrecoverable.

2. JUDGMENT \Leftrightarrow 876(1) — PAYMENT — PRESUMPTION.

In action by administrator d. b. n. c. t. a. of wife whose trustee upon a separate trust had judgment in 1878 revived in 1888, against husband brought against husband's executor, where trustee died in 1902, and no successor was appointed until 1916, there was a conclusive presumption of payment under Act April 27, 1855 (P. L. 369) § 7.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Lancaster County.

Scire facias sur judgment by William J. Coulter, successor to John Line, in trust for the separate use of Eliza Rissler, widow of Jacob B. Rissler, deceased, of whom Wm. J. Coulter is administrator d. b. n. c. t. a. against Theodore Line, executor of Jacob B. Rissler, deceased. From a judgment for defendant non obstante veredicto, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The facts appear from the following opinion by Landis, P. J., in the common pleas sur defendant's motion for judgment n. o. v.:

On March 25, 1878, there was entered in this court to January term, 1878, No. 604, a judgment bond, in which John Line, in trust for the separate use of Eliza Rissler, wife of Jacob B. Rissler, was the plaintiff, and Jacob B. Rissler, of Ephrata township, was the defendant. The judgment was dated March 16, 1878, was given to secure the sum of $1,900, and was made payable on April 1, 1879, with interest. On March 23, 1883, the judgment was revived by an amicable scire facias, entered to January term, 1883, No. 522; and on May 28, 1888, it was, in a similar way, revived by an amicable scire facias, entered to April term, 1888, No. 457. No other proceedings were had concerning it, until the present scire facias was sued out.

On May 22, 1892, Eliza Rissler died, leaving a last will and testament, in which her husband, Jacob B. Rissler, was named as executor. No inventory nor account was ever filed by him in his wife's estate. Under this will, after certain small specific legacies, the balance of the estate was given to him during his natural life. On January 5, 1902, John Line, the trustee named in the judgment, died, and no trustee was appointed to succeed him, until some time in 1916. On May 14, 1915, Jacob B. Rissler died, and shortly thereafter William J. Coulter was appointed administrator d. b. n. c. t. a. of Elizabeth (Eliza) Rissler, deceased, and he was also appointed trustee in the judgment in place of the said John Line, deceased. Under these admitted facts, a verdict was directed by the court in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $4,750, and a rule was then granted for judgment for the defendant non obstante veredicto, on a point reserved, which raised the question whether the presumption of payment was a bar to the action.

[1] In Coleman v. Erie Trust Co., 255 Pa. 63, 99 Atl. 217, it was held that "the presumption, arising from lapse of time, that a judgment has been paid, is not conclusive, but is merely a presumption of fact which is rebuttable. The presumption does not arise where there is affirmative proof that the debt has not been paid, or where there are circumstances that sufficiently account for the delay of the creditors." But section 7 of Act April 27, 1855 (P. L. 369), provides that, "in all cases where no payment, claim or demand shall have been made on account of, or for any ground rent, annuity or other charge upon real estate for twenty-one years, or no declaration or acknowledgment of the existence thereof shall have been made within that period by the owner of the premises, subject to such ground rent, annuity, or charge, a release or extinguishment thereof shall be presumed, and such ground rent, annuity or charge shall thereafter be irrecoverable." It was therefore said, in Stephenson's Estate, 256 Pa. 487, 100 Atl. 985, that it is not necessary to plead the act of 1855, and that, to remove the bar of that act, demand must be made of, or acknowledgment by, all the owners sought to be affected thereby. In Wingett's Appeal, 122 Pa. 486, 15 Atl. 863, the court held that "it is very clear, therefore, that if the person claiming payment of such charge or lien is able to show neither a claim or demand of payment made by him on the owner of such real estate, nor a payment upon or an acknowledgment of the existence of such lien or charge by such owner within the statutory period, then the act operates to raise a conclusive presumption of the release or extinguishment of the demand, and declares that it shall 'thereafter be unrecoverable.'"

In the recent case of Yocum's Estate, 242 Pa. 82, 88 Atl. 919, the question raised in this proceeding seems to have been determined by the Supreme Court. If there appeared, that, on June 2, 1875, Jesse Yocum executed his bond, with a warrant of attorney attached, for $2,000, payable one year after date, to Stephen Coates, as trustee for his wife, Ann Yocum. Jesse Yocum died on October 10, 1896, devising his farm to his wife for life, with the privilege of borrowing on it to a limited amount for certain purposes. Mrs. Yocum resided on the property until May 31, 1911, the time of her decease. A claim upon the bond was presented against Jesse Yocum's estate, but was disallowed in the court below, first, upon the ground that the bond was no lien upon the land, and, second, because a presumption had arisen "from facts and circumstances inconsistent with the idea that the debt had not been canceled." The Supreme Court disagreed with the court below as to the second reason given, but affirmed the judgment, deciding broadly that, "where a wife has loaned money to her husband who has given a bond to a trustee to secure the repayment of such money, under the Act April 15, 1851 (P. L. 689), the transaction assumes the form of a contract, equally binding on both parties, and is, like other contracts, subject to the statute of limitations and the presumption of payment," and that, where "such a bond, which has been due more than twenty years, is presented against the estate of a husband by the executor of the wife's estate, the presumption of payment applies, and in the absence of evidence to rebut it, the claim will be disallowed." Mr. Chief Justice Brown, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "If a loan made by a married woman, in the way in which Mrs. Yocum lent her money to her husband, 'assumes the form of a contract,' as it certainly does, and 'is binding equally on both parties,' as it surely is by the express words of the act, why is it not subject, like other contracts, to the statute of limitations and the presumption of payment? Yocum did not contract directly with his wife, but with a third person as trustee for her, and the bond given to the trustee was 'as good and valid in law' against the obligor's estate 'as though the investment had been made by a trustee appointed by the court.' If these words of the act of 1851 mean anything, it is that a trustee named in an obligation given by a husband can enforce payment upon its maturity, for such would be the unquestioned right if the wife's money should be invested by a trustee appointed by the court. That there was a right in Coates as trustee to collect the bond by an action at law, if it had not contained a warrant of attorney for the confession of judgment, is recognized in Galt v. Smith, 145 Pa. 167 [22 Atl. 718], where the action was by a trustee named in a bond, the condition of which was that the husband should pay interest on a certain sum to his wife annually during her life. In the present case nothing was to be paid directly to Mrs. Yocum, but the entire sum of $2,000, with interest, was payable to Coates, trustee, one year after the date of the bond. With the right in the trustee to enforce payment of the bond by proceedings at law, there was a corresponding right at law in Yocum to make defense to it, and whatever defense he might have made while living is now open to his legatees. Hoch's Appeal, 21 Pa. 280; Ritter's Appeal, 23 Pa. 96. When Yocum died a presumption of payment of the bond had arisen. Time had written a receipt across its face, and with no evidence to rebut this, the court below should have declared it paid in the eye of the law. The failure to do so was a failure to give effect to the manifest intention of the Legislature as expressed in the act of 1851—that the loan of the wife's money to Yocum, through Coates as trustee, had assumed the form of a contract, enforceable at law by the latter, with a reciprocal right of defense in the former, whether the wife was living or dead when the right to collect accrued."

[2] In this case, there is not a particle of evidence of demand by the creditor or acknowledgment of the debt on the part of the debtor. The whole matter remained quiescent from May 28, 1888, when the judgment was last revived, until after the death of Jacob B. Rissler, in 1915. It is true that, about five years after the amicable revival, Jacob B. Rissler became the executor of his wife's will; but this fact does not appear to have changed the situation. It is also true that, about 15 years after Mrs. Rissler's decease, John Line, the trustee, died, and no one was appointed in his place. The omission, however, to take such action does not seem to me, under the authorities, to have taken away from Jacob B. Rissler his right under the law to claim the presumption of payment after the statutory period had passed, and, if this be true, the same principle applies in favor of his legal representatives. I am therefore of the opinion that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover in this case.

Verdict for plaintiffs for $4,750; the lower court subsequently entered judgment for defendant non obstante verdicto. Plaintiffs appealed.

Error assigned, among others, was in entering judgment for defendant non obstante verdicto.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCH-ZISKER, FRAZER, WALLING, and SIMPSON, JJ.

B. F. Davis, of Lancaster, for appellant.

J. E. Malone, of Lancaster, and Joseph T. Evans, of Ephrata, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. This judgment is affirmed on the opinion of the learned court below making the rule for it absolute.

(363 Pa. 114)

In re MORRIS' ESTATE.

Appeal of PENNOCK et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. July 17, 1918.)

1. WILLS \Leftrightarrow 316(2)—TESTAMENTARY INCAPACITY—ISSUE.

Where testatrix, although prostrated with grief at her sister's death, prepared her will with assistance of her physician, and actively directed her business affairs up until then, and the chief beneficiary had been peculiarly close and useful to her for many years, an issue devisavit vel non on ground of her incapacity was properly refused.

2. WILLS \Leftrightarrow 52(1)—TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY—PRESUMPTION.

The law presumes testamentary capacity.

3. WILLS \Leftrightarrow 82—UNNATURAL DISPOSITION.

The very office of a will is to effectuate as the law of his property, and as the guide to its descent, the testator's particular preferences and desires, and it is immaterial if he shocks the common sense of the community.

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Chester County.

Petition by Charles W. Pennock and others for an issue devisavit vel non in the estate of Hannah J. Morris, deceased. From a decree refusing the issue, petitioners appeal. Appeal dismissed.

The facts appear from the following opinion by Butler, P. J., in the orphans' court:

That Hannah Morris was prostrated with grief and shock by the death of her sister, Adelaide, and for a few days thereafter took little interest in, or notice of, relatives, friends, or other worldly matters, is proved, but there is an entire absence of any proof that would support a finding that the purported will was the product of undue influence, or that Hannah Morris lacked testamentary capacity when she executed it.

There was manifest occasion for her to make a new will, and the practically undisputed evidence is that she fully appreciated this fact, determined to make it, and promptly effectuated her purpose, with the clerical help of her physician, who profits not a penny by her will, she giving all directions and instructions as to its dispositions and seeing to it that the new will took the place of the old one among her papers, where it was found after her death.

According to the appellant's proof, weak and ailing as she was physically about the time she executed her last will, she was vigorous enough mentally to very peremptorily veto the proposition to provide an attorney in fact, and her refusal, coupled with the resolute declaration that she would not permit her affairs to be thus rushed, was accepted as final.

[1-3] Starting out with the law's presumption that she possessed testamentary capacity, and in the evidence finding proof of nothing substantially challenging her possession of such capacity—facts, not opinions, control (Browne v. Molliston, 3 Wharton, 129, and Combs & Hanksinon's Appeal, 105 Pa. 155)—but, on the other hand, the evidence affirmatively indicating that she was a woman of mental force and average intelligence and information, generally, accordingly to the great preponderance of proof, supervising and directing her business matters inside and outside her home, until about the time of her death, we entertain no doubt that the probate of the contested paper, as the will of Hannah Morris, should be sustained.

If, as contended, but under a review of the evidence not apparent we think, the provisions of the will are unnatural, different from what would have been expected, this in itself would afford no ground for finding the absence of testamentary capacity or presence of undue influence. The very office of a will is to effectuate as the law of his property, as the guide to its descent, the testator's particular preference and desires, and it matters not if he shocks the common sense of the community. Johnson's Estate, 159 Pa. 630, 28 Atl. 448 (see opinion of lower court); Bitner v. Bitner, 65 Pa. 347.

As a fact we view her will as natural, as what might have been expected to result from the operation of her surroundings upon her mind. The undisputed proof is that the chief beneficiary was peculiarly close and useful to the deceased for some years prior to her death; that she had good reason to feel grateful to him; that in his absence, without his knowledge, aided only by her physician, who took the instructions directly from her, she had the paper prepared, executed it, and arranged that it should appear among her effects upon her death. The conclusion follows, that it is her will, disposing of her property as she wished, and its validity is not challenged to the point where an issue should be granted, either by the evidence, relied upon to directly prove lack of capacity, or by the circumstance that the provisions of her will might surprise those who did not know of her inclination and preference. Morgan's Estate, 219 Pa. 355, 68 Atl. 953.

The lower court dismissed the appeal from the decree of the register of wills. Charles E. Pennock, Charles J. Pennock, and Anna F. Pennock appealed.

Argued, before BROWN, O. J., and MOSCHZISKE, FRAZER, WALLING, and SIMPSON, JJ.

S. Duffield Mitchell, of West Chester, for appellants.

Joseph Gillilan of Philadelphia, and Wallace S. Harlan, of Coatesville, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is dismissed, at appellant's costs on the opinion of the learned president judge of the court below refusing an issue devisavit vel non.

(262 Pa. 93)

IN RE WOHLSEN'S ESTATE.

WOHLSEN v. NORTHERN TRUST & SAVINGS CO. OF LANCASTER.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. July 17, 1918.)

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ~~§~~402 — PAYMENT OF TAXES AND REPAIRS — SURCHARGE.

The executrix of a testator possessing no personalty and leaving two mortgaged lots, where subsequent judgment note for sum exceeding the equities was of record in trust for testator's creditors, after judicial sale, subject to mortgage, of one lot for payment of debts, would be surcharged, where she appropriated the proceeds of the sale to taxes, repairs, and interest on other mortgage.

Appeal from Orphans' Court, Lancaster County.

Exceptions to adjudications in case of Anna S. Wohlsein, executrix of Peter N. Wohlsein, deceased, against the Northern Trust & Savings Company of Lancaster, Pa., trustee for creditors in estate of Peter N. Wohlsein, deceased. From a decree sustaining exceptions, plaintiff appeals. Dismissed.

From the record it appeared that Peter N. Wohlsein died on January 3, 1915, leaving no personal property, but seized of two tracts of real estate. The one, No. 340 College avenue (in the city of Lancaster), was incumbered by a mortgage of $5,000. The other was a lot on South Marshall street (in said city), on which were erected 10 dwelling houses. This lot was incumbered by two mortgages, for $15,000 and $3,000 respectively. Following all these mortgages was a judgment for $12,857, confessed by the decedent to the Northern Trust & Savings Company, trustee, in trust for his creditors existing at the time the judgment was confessed. The decedent left no personal property.

On January 28, 1915, the executrix, Anna S. Wohlsein, presented her petition to the orphans' court, asking for the sale of property, No. 340 College avenue, for the payment of the debts of the decedent. No debts were scheduled, except funeral expenses and doctor bills and the judgment in trust for creditors above referred to. The sale was ordered, and was held in pursuance thereof on February 18, 1915, and the property, No. 340 College avenue, was sold, subject to the mortgage of $5,000 incumbering it, for $2,375, and the money paid to the executrix. It is this money which forms the subject-matter in dispute.

The South Marshall street properties were not sold at the same time, owing to a pending equity suit as to the decedent's title. The executrix, who was also the sole legatee under the will, collected the rents. She applied the proceeds of sale of the property, No. 340 College avenue, to the payment of the taxes, repairs, and mortgage interest on the South Marshall street properties accruing after the College avenue house was sold.

The lower court surcharged the defendant to the extent of payments so made. Anna S. Wohlsen, executrix, appealed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCH-ZISKER, FRAZER, WALLING, and SIMPSON, JJ.

Edwin M. Gilbert, of Lancaster, for appellant.

William H. Keller, M. G. Schaeffer, and John A. Coyle, all of Lancaster, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. The correct conclusion of the learned court below was that the appellant had shown nothing which justified her in appropriating the proceeds of the sale of the College avenue property to the payment of indebtedness on the Marshall street properties, and her appeal from the surcharge is dismissed, at her costs.

(263 Pa. 75)

STEINMETZ et al. v. FENNESSY et al.
(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. July 17, 1918.)

SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS §63(5)—SURCHARGE OF SCHOOL DIRECTORS—REVIEW OF FACTS.

On appeal from surcharge of school directors for paying teachers salaries in excess of those fixed, facts found by lower court are not reviewable, as, in view of Act May 3, 1909 (P. L. 392), an appeal lies only from legal conclusions in such a case.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Columbia County.

Action by Ferdinand Steinmetz and others against William J. Fennessy and others, directors of the School District of Conyngham Township, Columbia County. From a decree on report of auditors surcharging defendants with the amount of salaries paid school-teachers in excess of amount of salaries fixed at beginning of school year, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCH-ZISKER, FRAZER, WALLING, and SIMPSON, JJ.

Edward J. Flynn, of New York City, for appellants.

R. S. Hemingway, of Bloomsburg, D. W. Kaercher, of Pottsville, and Fred Ikeler, of Bloomsburg, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. This appeal is from a surcharge by the appellants, school directors of Conyngham township, Columbia county. The facts found by the court below, upon which the surcharge was based, are not reviewable, for an appeal lies only from legal conclusions in such a case. Section 4, Act May 3, 1909 (P. L. 392). The legal conclusions appealed from logically followed the facts found, and, on those conclusions, the decree of the court below is affirmed, at the costs of the appellants.

(263 Pa. 121)

COMMONWEALTH ex rel. COUNSIL, Dist. Atty., v. DICKEY et al.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. July 17, 1918.)

1. MANDAMUS §168(4)—DUTY OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—REBUILDING OF BRIDGE.

In mandamus to compel county commissioners to rebuild a bridge destroyed by flood, where defense was that it was not a county bridge, but where county commissioners had erected a bridge there, and after its destruction had rebuilt the destroyed bridge, the fact that record of 60 years ago which would conclusively show it a county bridge was missing was immaterial, and mandamus should have been awarded.

2. BRIDGES §21(2) — MAINTENANCE — STATE ROUTE.

Though the destroyed bridge which county commissioners refused to rebuild was on a state route, the duty of building and maintaining a bridge there, which had rested on the county for more than 60 years, would continue.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Clinton County.

Petition for mandamus by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, on relation of H. M. Counsil, District Attorney, against Adam Dickey and others, Commissioners of Clinton County. From an order refusing mandamus, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and record remitted, with direction that writ be issued.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

William H. Keller, First Deputy Atty. Gen., Henry Hipple, of Lock Haven, and Francis Shunk Brown, Atty. Gen., for appellant.

H. S. Furst, of Lock Haven, for appellees.

BROWN, C. J. This appeal is from the refusal of a writ of mandamus to compel the commissioners of Clinton county to rebuild a bridge which was swept away by a flood in 1913. The writ was denied because the court below was of opinion that the structure so destroyed was not a county bridge, and the appellees were, therefore, under no duty to rebuild it. The original construction of a county bridge is regulated by statute, and a county cannot be required to build it unless all statutory provisions are complied with. Railroad Co. v. Lawrence County, 198 Pa. 1, 47 Atl. 955; Commonwealth v. Baker, 212 Pa. 230, 61 Atl. 910; Commonwealth v. Bowman, 218 Pa. 330, 67 Atl. 622. The prerequisites to the authority of county commissioners to build a bridge are: (1) A report of viewers that the bridge is necessary and would be too expensive for the township;

sioners of the county; and (3) that the bridge has been entered on record as a county bridge. The question before the court below was not as to the duty of the county commissioners to build a bridge in the first instance, but as to their duty to rebuild what the relator avers had been a county bridge, originally constructed and subsequently maintained by the county under a statutory duty to do so.

[1] From the admitted facts in this case there is a conclusive presumption that the destroyed bridge was a county bridge, and we proceed to state them: In 1856 the commissioners of Clinton county presented their petition to its court of quarter sessions, setting forth that, as it had appeared to the said court, to the grand jury of the county, and to the petitioners that a bridge over Chatham run, at the point where the bridge involved in this proceeding was built, was necessary, and that its erection would be too expensive for the township in which it was located, the same had been entered of record, and the petitioners had procured an estimate, as nearly as might be possible, of the money needed to erect such bridge, amounting to the sum of $1,772.44, which sum they had provided out of the county rates and levies, and had proceeded to have the bridge erected by entering into a contract with certain contractors for the building of the same; that the bridge was completed and the contractors had in every respect fulfilled their contract, and the prayer of the petition was for the appointment of persons to inspect the said bridge, the working thereof, and make report accordingly. The language of this petition followed strictly the words of the act of June 13, 1836 (P. L. 551), relating to the erection of county bridges, and averred affirmatively that everything required by the statute in imposing upon the county the duty of constructing the bridge had been complied with. But the admitted facts go still further. In 1893 the county commissioners presented a petition to the court of quarter sessions, setting forth that the "county bridge" which had been erected by their predecessors over Chatham run had been washed away by a flood, that they had entered into a contract for the erection of another in its place, and that the contractors had rebuilt the bridge. The prayer of the petition was for the appointment of viewers to inspect the same and make report to the court. From the foregoing facts the conclusive presumption is that the bridge over Chatham run was a county bridge more than 60 years ago, and the present county authorities are estopped from saying that it ought not to be regarded as such merely because a record is missing which it was the duty of their predecursors of the county to have entered of record," and the present commissioners, in their effort to impose on the state the duty of rebuilding the bridge, are not to be permitted to take advantage of the failure of some former board of county commissioners to preserve this record 60 years ago. If it had been preserved, the presumption is it would show that the county commissioners of 1856 had done nothing required of them as public officers under the County Bridge Act of 1836, for presumuntur rite esse acta." Vernon v. Ship et al. v. United Natural Gas Co. 435, 100 Atl. 1007.

[2] Though the bridge which the appellant refused to rebuild is on a state route, the duty of building and maintaining a bridge there, which has rested on the county more than 60 years, still continues. Commonwealth ex rel. v. Bird, 253 Pa. 448, 100 Atl. 648, and Commonwealth ex rel. v. Atty. Gen. v. Grove et al., 104 Atl. 732, 100 Pa. 435, 100 Atl. 1007.

The order of the court dismissing the petition for a mandamus is reversed, a new record is remitted, with direction that a writ be issued as prayed for.

(262)

INDIAN et al. v. DELAWARE, L. & N. CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. July 1918.)

1. PLEADING — 433(8) — VARIANCE — ACTION — VERDICT.

In action against carrier for personal injury, where fact not covered by pleading testified to by plaintiff's witnesses, who cross-examined thereon, and where there was no formal objection to the variance on any ground for nonsuit or continuance, defendant's verdict and judgment, could not succeed on a complaint of variance.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR — 1050(1), 1050(2) — HARMLESS ERROR — ADMISSION AND EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

Assignments of error to the admission and exclusion of evidence disclosing no substantial injury to defendant actually or probably resulting therefrom would be dismissed.

3. TRIAL — 296(3) — INSTRUCTION — COUNTERCLAIM — OTHER INSTRUCTIONS — PERSONAL INJURY.

In action for personal injury from carrier's negligence in not maintaining floor and cars in reasonably safe condition, instruction requiring carrier must maintain cars in proper condition in connection with affirmative answers to plaintiff's point that carrier must exercise highest degree of care in seeing that cars and cars are in reasonably safe condition, sufficient to define what would constitute negligence.

4. DAMAGES — 186 — EVIDENCE — PERSONAL INJURY — AGE OF PLAINTIFF.

In action against carrier for personal injury, failure of testimony as to age of plaintiff was no ground for refusing a recovery upon his life expectancy, where plaintiff's present and jury had ample opportunity to form its own opinion as to his age.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐209(2)—PRESERVATION OF GROUND OF REVIEW—OMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In action against carrier for personal injury, where defendant did not object to what it deemed a lack of evidence as to plaintiff's age and expectancy, it waived its right to object thereto on appeal.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐287(1)—REMARKS OF COUNSEL—PREJUDICE.

Appellant's complaint that remarks of plaintiff's counsel as to probable time a certain person would live was without merit, where, if improper, there was no request to withdraw a juror or for instructions as to impropriety.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Lackawanna County.

Trespass by Thomas Indian and Mary A. Indian against the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Company, to recover damages for personal injuries. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Trespass to recover damages for personal injuries.

On the trial the court affirmed plaintiffs' first and second points for charge, which were as follows:

(1) A carrier of passengers, having impliedly invited the public to enter its cars, is required to exercise a high degree of care in protecting the passengers while entering the car and going through the aisles and passageways to seats. And it is the duty of the carrier to exercise care in seeing that the threshold of the cars and carpets in the aisles of the cars are in a reasonably safe condition so that passengers will not be injured.

(2) It is the duty of a carrier of passengers for hire to provide reasonably safe means for passengers going in and out of its passenger cars, and these means include reasonably safe steps, aisles, and passageways in the cars, and the failure to use due care to keep and maintain these means of egress and ingress in a reasonably safe condition and repair is negligence on the carrier's part.

The opinion of the Supreme Court further states the facts.

Verdict for Thomas Indian for $1,757.75 and for Mary A. Indian for $1,022.25 and judgment thereon. Defendant appealed to the Supreme Court from the judgment in favor of Thomas Indian.

Errors assigned were in refusing to enter judgment for defendant n. o. v., rulings on evidence, and instructions to the jury.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHISKER, and WALLING, JJ.

J. H. Oliver, H. A. Knapp, and D. R. Reese, all of Scranton, for appellant.

Joseph O'Brien and William J. Fitzgerald, both of Scranton, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. On the trial below the defendant asked that a verdict be directed in its favor, but on this appeal admits that the case was for the jury.

[1] Appellant's first contention is that there was a variance between the allegata and probata. The variance, if any, was very slight. Mary A. Indian and her daughter both testified, without objection by the defendant, to the condition of the carpet on the floor of the car, and the mother was cross-examined as to this. No formal objection to the variance was raised at the time of the trial, and, as the case proceeded on its merits, with no motion for a nonsuit or a continuance by the defendant, it cannot now, after a verdict and judgment against it, complain of the alleged variance. Carter v. Henderson & Co., Ltd., 224 Pa. 319, 78 Atl. 554; Herlein v. City of McKeesport, 247 Pa. 277, 93 Atl. 319.

[2] Appellant's second complaint is of testimony admitted and excluded. The assignments relating to this disclose no substantial injury to the defendant, which was the actual or probable result of the errors complained of, and the said assignments are therefore dismissed. City of Allegheny v. Nelson et al., 25 Pa. 332; Trego v. Pierce, 119 Pa. 189, 12 Atl. 864.

[3] The third complaint is of the inadequacy of the charge on the questions of negligence and the measure of damages. The jury were instructed that the negligence of which the appellees complained was the failure and neglect of the defendant company to construct and maintain the floor, threshold, and carpet in a reasonably safe condition in the passenger car in which Mrs. Indian fell, and the instruction to them was that it was the duty of the defendant company, as a common carrier, to maintain its cars in a reasonably proper manner. This, taken in connection with the answers to plaintiffs' first and second points, made it most clear to the jury what would have constituted negligence in the matter of which complaint was made.

[4, 5] The complaint that the court erred in its instruction on the measure of damages, because there was no testimony as to the age of Thomas Indian, is sufficiently answered by the following from the opinion of the court below refusing a new trial:

"The husband was present at the trial and pointed out by the first witness on the stand. The jury had ample opportunity during the four days of the trial to form its own opinion of his age, if this was required. The defendant having gone to trial and taken its chances of a verdict without objection to what it deemed a lack of evidence as to the question of the husband's age and expectancy, it has by so doing waived its right to now object. If it had objected at any proper time the wife and daughter might have testified to the age of the husband and father. He could not have testified very well on account of his defective hearing."

[6] The final complaint of the appellant of remarks made by counsel for the plaintiffs as to the probability of the time Mrs. Young would live is also without merit. If they were improper, there was no request for the withdrawal of a juror nor for instructions to the jury as to their impropriety.

All of the assignments are overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

1. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS §6(9) — OFFENSES — ADVERTISING AS PHYSICIAN — INDICTMENT.

In prosecution for advertising and holding one's self out as a physician, it is unnecessary to allege that accused practiced medicine without a license.

2. CRIMINAL LAW §1178—APPEAL—WAIVER OF EXCEPTIONS.

Exceptions not briefed are waived.

3. CRIMINAL LAW §1050—APPEAL—EXCEPTIONS.

Where the only ground of demurrer stated in the brief was not raised by the exceptions, the court would not, to reverse the case, search the record for other defects or errors.

4. CRIMINAL LAW §1147 — REVIEW — FINAL TRIAL—DISCRETION OF COURT—TRANSFER.

It is, under Gen. Laws, § 2262, wholly within the discretion of the trial court whether it shall pass the case to the Supreme Court before final trial; and, it not appearing that such discretion has been abused, it is not reviewable.

5. CRIMINAL LAW §1165(1) — APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR.

In prosecution for unlawfully holding one's self out as physician and surgeon, accused held not prejudiced by the trial court's refusal to pass the case to the Supreme Court before final trial, where the demurrer, not being waived by going to trial on the merits, could be heard as well after as before trial.

Exceptions from Chittenden County Court; Frank L. Fish, Judge.

Frank C. Kaats was convicted under Pub. St. §§ 5370, 5371, and amendments, of advertising and holding himself out as a physician and surgeon, and he excepts. No error.

Argued before WATSON, C. J., and HAS-ELTON, POWERS, TAYLOR, and MILES, JJ.

Allen Martin, State's Atty., of Essex Junction, and Rufus E. Brown, of Burlington, for the State.

M. G. Leary, of Burlington, M. H. Alexander, of St. Albans, and Morris & Hartwell, of La Crosse, Wis., for respondent.

MILES, J. This is a prosecution against the respondent for advertising and holding himself out to the public as a physician and surgeon without being licensed as required by law, and was by information in three counts, to which the respondent demurred. The demurrer was overruled, and to this the respondent excepted. Upon the overruling of the demurrer, the respondent moved to have the case sent to this court before final trial. This motion was overruled, to which action of the court the respondent excepted. The case was then tried by jury, and a verdict of guilty was found, and the case comes here on the exceptions to the overruling of the respondent's demurrer and motion.

[1-3] The only ground of demurrer stated in the respondent's brief is that the information does not specifically charge the respondent with practicing medicine without a license, and the prosecution is not for practicing medicine contrary to law. The respondent commences his exceptions by saying:

"This is a prosecution against the respondent for advertising and holding himself out to the public as a physician and surgeon."

It was therefore unnecessary to allege that the respondent practiced medicine without a license, and the information was not subject to demurrer for failure to so allege. The point argued is not raised by the exceptions, and, no other ground of demurrer being stated and relied upon in the respondent's brief, we do not, to reverse a case, search the record for defects or errors not called to our attention by the respondent. Exceptions not briefed are waived. Rogers v. Bigelow, 90 Vt. 41, 96 Atl. 417; Parry & Jones v. Empire Granite Co., 90 Vt. 231, 97 Atl. 985; Bagley v. Cooper, 90 Vt. 576, 99 Atl. 230.

[4, 5] The other exception relied upon by the respondent is to the trial court's refusal to pass the case to this court before final trial. No authorities are cited in the respondent's brief supporting this exception, and none, we think, can be found. It was a matter wholly within the discretion of the trial court (G. L. § 2262), and being within the discretion of the trial court, and it not appearing that that discretion has been abused, it is not reviewable by this court (Lincoln v. C. V. Ry. Co., 82 Vt. 187, 72 Atl. 821, 137 Am. St. Rep. 998; Manley Bros. v. B. & M. R. R. Co. et al., 90 Vt. 218, 97 Atl. 674); besides, the respondent has not been harmed by the court's refusal to send the case here before final trial, for, being a criminal case, the demurrer was not waived by going to trial on the merits, and the respondent could be heard on his demurrer as well after as before trial in county court (State v. Bosworth, 74 Vt. 315, 52 Atl. 423; State v. Perkins, 88 Vt. 121, 92 Atl. 1).

Judgment that there is no error, and that the respondent take nothing by his exceptions. Let execution be done.

(92 Vt. 454)

DODGE BROS. v. CENTRAL VERMONT RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Vermont. Washington. Nov. 11, 1918.)

1. RAILROADS §443(6)—FENCES — PROOF OF NEGLIGENCE.

Under P. S. 4453, requiring railroads to maintain good and sufficient fences, mere proof that a hook on a gate was so loose in the staple that it was easily unhooked, and might be displaced by the whisk of a tail or the rubbing of a nose of a horse, was not alone sufficient to show proximate cause of the gate being open; but, however, direct evidence is not necessary to show that such was the proximate cause.

2. RAILROADS ¶446(13)—FENCES—STOCK ON TRACK—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action for damages for stock killed on a railroad, whether a loose hook on a gate in the right of way fence, which might be displaced by the whisk of a tail or the rubbing of a nose, was the proximate cause of the gate being open, held for the jury.

3. TRIAL ¶251(1)—INSTRUCTIONS—SUBMISSION OF ISSUES.

It is error to submit to jury a basis for recovery outside the pleadings.

4. RAILROADS ¶413(4)—FENCES—GATES—KEEPING CLOSED—"MAINTAIN."

Under P. S. 4453, making it the duty of a railroad to "maintain" sufficient fence, does not make it the duty of the railroad to keep closed a gate provided for use and benefit of a stock owner.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Maintain.]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶273(6)—MATTERS REVIEWABLE—EXCEPTIONS.

Where, after exception was taken, court gave supplemental charge on matter excepted to and other subjects, a question, "May our exception be noted to the supplemental charge?" and an answer, "Yes," did not constitute a sufficient exception.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶280—MATTERS REVIEWABLE—EXCEPTIONS.

Where a supplemental charge was not a correction or modification of the original charge but a reiteration of it, appellant is entitled to the benefit of an exception to the original charge, although its exception to the supplemental charge was not sufficiently explicit to be available.

Exceptions from Washington County Court; Leighton P. Slack, Judge.

Action by Dodge Brothers against the Central Vermont Railway Company. Verdict for plaintiffs, and defendant brings exceptions. Reversed and remanded.

John W. Gordon and S. Hollister Jackson, both of Barre, for plaintiffs.

John W. Redmond, of Newport, and Charles F. Black, of St. Albans, for defendant.

POWERS, J. During the night of September 30, 1915, five colts belonging to the plaintiffs escaped from the pasture adjoining the defendant's railroad by passing through an open gate onto the track, and were there killed by the defendant's train. It was conceded below that the value of the colts was $700, and after the trial a plaintiffs' verdict for that amount was returned. At the close of the evidence, the defendant moved for a verdict on the grounds: (1) That there was no evidence in the case tending to show any faulty construction of the gate or its appurtenances was the proximate cause of the injury complained of; (2) that there was no evidence in the case tending to show how, when, or by whom the gate was opened so as to allow the colts to escape; (3) that, assuming that the evidence warranted an inference that the gate and its appurtenances were improperly constructed, there was no evidence in the case tending to show that such defects were the proximate cause of the injury complained of; and (4) it was not permissible to allow the jury to act upon mere surmise or conjecture in determining how the gate was opened. This motion was overruled, and the defendant excepted.

[1] By P. S. 4453, the defendant was required to build and maintain a good and sufficient fence between the road and the plaintiffs' pasture. The gate through which the colts escaped was a part of the fence so required, and it was the defendant's duty to keep it and its appurtenances "good and sufficient." This is admitted. There was evidence tending to show that the device provided and used to keep the gate closed—a hook and staple—was insufficient and inadequate; that the hook was so loose in the staple that it was easily unhooked, and might be displaced by the whisk of a tail or rubbing of a nose. But this alone was not enough to charge the defendant with liability. The plaintiffs were required to go one step further, and show by a fair preponderance of evidence that the defects referred to were the proximate cause of the escape of the colts. On this subject the jury is not to be allowed to speculate; and, if the evidence is equally consistent with the existence or nonexistence of liability, it is error to leave the question to the jury at all. In order to sustain the verdict, there must be found in the record evidence fairly and reasonably tending to show that the escape of the colts resulted from the defects shown. The law does not require, however, that this fact be established by direct evidence. Circumstantial evidence may be resorted to, and, if it is of the requisite character and force, it is sufficient. It must be admitted that the circumstances here relied upon to show that the colts themselves unhooked this gate in some such way as stated above, and then pushed it open, are not of a very decisive character; but it cannot be said that they are not sufficient to create a legal tendency, or to sustain a jury inference.

[2] One of the plaintiffs testified that the gate was closed at about 5 o'clock of the day before the accident. The character and location of the pasture made it improbable that any person would have occasion to use the gate between that time and the time when the colts were killed. The character of the soil inside the gate was such that footprints would naturally be discoverable if a person had passed through the gate during or about the time named. No such tracks were to be seen, though the ground was examined the next morning. In these circumstances, the question of the proximate cause was for the jury. It is true that one of the trainmen testified that he went through the gate into the pasture immediately after the accident, and that his tracks were not seen by the witnesses who examined the place.

tiffs, and was nothing more than a circumstance to be weighed and considered by the jury. The suggestion that the evidence shows that third persons made use of the gate is without force. The evidence coming nearest to this is that showing that persons were seen on the track near by. But this had no tendency to show that they made any use of this gate.

The defendant excepted "to that part of the charge in which the court held that the defendant was under a legal duty to keep the gate closed." In connection with this exception, the defendant insisted that if it had built and maintained a good and sufficient fence, including the gate and its fastenings, it had discharged its full duty and was under no obligation to see to it that the gate was kept closed.

[3, 4] Any reference to this duty was outside the issue. The only insufficiency in the fence or gate charged in the declaration was that—

"The latch of said gate, whereby it was hooked and closed, was fastened to the pasture side of said gate and was loose."

There was no allegation suggesting that the defendant was at fault in any other respect. So no other shortage of duty was involved. Seeley v. Cent. Vt. Ry. Co., 88 Vt. 178, 92 Atl. 28. The rule is that it is error to submit to the jury a basis for recovery outside the pleadings. Smith v. C. V. Ry. Co., 80 Vt. 208, 87 Atl. 535. But the exception to this instruction was not put upon this ground, but upon the ground that it embodied an erroneous statement of law. The court did not charge in express terms that it was the defendant's duty to keep the gate closed; but it was the plain import of the instruction that this duty rested on the defendant, and that its failure therein would amount to a failure to "maintain" a sufficient fence at that point. This view is supported by courts of great respectability. Nevertheless we do not think it is sound. The gate was provided for the use and benefit of the plaintiffs. The defendant made no use of it and derived no advantage from it. We cannot regard an open gate as an insufficiency in the fence. If it and its fastenings were "good and sufficient" within the meaning of the law, the duty of keeping it closed was upon the plaintiffs, and the fact that it was found open is not enough to impute negligence to or establish liability on the part of the defendant. This view seems to be supported by the weight of authority and harmonizes better with our statutory provisions. Megrue v. Lennox, 59 Ohio St. 479, 52 N. E. 1022; Swanson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 79 Minn. 398, 82 N. W. 870, 49 L. R. A. 625; Adams v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 46 Kan. 161, 26 Pac. 439; Diamond Brick Co. v. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. Co., 55 Hun, 605, 7 N. Y. Supp. 868. See, also, other etc., R. Co., 49 L. R. A. 625.

[5, 6] The instruction was manifestly harmful, and the exception to it will have to be sustained unless it was waived or vitiated by what followed. After the exception was taken, the court gave a supplemental charge on this and other subjects. At the close of this supplemental charge, the defendant attempted to except, saying merely, "May our exception be noticed to the supplemental charge?" To which the court replied, "Yes." It is apparent that this exception was not sufficiently explicit to be available, for it did not point out which of the several matters covered it referred to. The general rule is that, when a supplemental instruction is given on a point excepted to in the original charge, the exception must be renewed or the supplemental instruction will be regarded as satisfactory and the error, if any, cured. Davis v. C. V. Ry. Co., 88 Vt. 460, 92 Atl. 973. But here the supplemental charge was not a correction or modification of the original charge, but a reiteration of it. In the circumstances shown, the defendant is entitled to the benefit of his original exception, though it failed in its attempt to renew it.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

(93 Vt. 405)

FORD et al. v. HERSEY et al.

(Supreme Court of Vermont. Chittenden.
Nov. 5, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐959(2)—ABUSE OF DISCRETION—REVIEW.

The Supreme Court will not interfere with an order of chancellor denying a motion for leave to file a cross-bill during trial, unless there is a clear case of abuse of discretion.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐1048(5)—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

A question asked but not answered could not have resulted in prejudice to the exceptant.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐230—MATTERS REVIEWABLE—TIMELY OBJECTION.

Exceptions to questions asked a witness, made after questions were answered, cannot be considered on appeal, where answers were responsive and the record contains nothing to show questions were answered before objection could have been interposed.

Appeal in Chancery, Chittenden County; Frank L. Fish, Chancellor.

Suit by Mattie H. Ford and another against Harvey Hersey and others to set aside deeds from plaintiffs to defendant, which defendant was alleged to have altered after execution, having obtained possession of them without the consent of plaintiffs and placed them on record. Thereafter defendant sold part of the premises covered by the deeds to defendants Smith. Decree for plaintiffs, and the defendants appeal. Altered, affirmed, and remanded, with directions.

Argued before WATSON, C. J., and HASELTON, POWERS, TAYLOR, and MILES, JJ.

Edward H. Deavitt, of Montpelier, and J. Ward Carver, of Barre, for appellant Hersey.

Erwin M. Harvey, of Montpelier, for appellants Smith.

V. A. Bullard and Sherman R. Moulton, both of Burlington, for appellees.

WATSON, C. J. [1] It is said that the decree rendered below gives no consideration to the matters sought to be brought into the case by the motion of defendant Hersey for leave to file a cross-bill, and that in the circumstances of the case the denial of the motion was an abuse of discretion, and consequently an error which this court will correct. The principle here invoked is well understood, but to make it applicable a clear case of such abuse must be made to appear. Our attention is called to the fact that it appears from the transcript that when the consideration or inducement for the deeds of April 6, 1904, was under consideration and Hersey was testifying concerning the matter he was asked whether there was any other consideration or inducement for making those deeds. Whereupon counsel for plaintiffs objected on the ground that it went to those prior conveyances, which could not be done in the absence of a cross-bill; and that it was not material to any issue in the case. The answer, which was in the negative, was received and exception saved by plaintiffs. The direct examination continued, and, so far as it appears, the course of it was not changed by reason of this objection and exception. The master's report shows that the case was heard on the evidence in December, 1915, closing on the 29th; that, after the taking of testimony was thus concluded, a further hearing was granted by the master, at Hersey's request for the purpose of receiving more evidence, and such hearing was had on the 27th day of July, 1916. The master's report was filed on August 2, 1917, and exceptions thereto were filed by all the defendants on the 16th day of the same month. The motion by Hersey for leave to file the so-called cross-bill was in fact a motion for leave to file a certain paper then presented, consisting of an amendment to his answer by way of allegations of new matter, and a cross-bill praying for specific and for general relief, all of great length and sworn to by him on November 9, 1917. Consequently this action was not presented to the chancellor at the earliest until the day last named, which was nearly two years after the aforementioned objection, based upon the want of a cross-bill, was made. The additional allegations, except as to change of counsel and prejudice of the master presently to be noticed, show nothing not fully known to Hersey when he made answer to the bill. It is alleged therein, however, that he told all such additional facts to his counsel before the latter drew the answer, but that they were not included, and many of them were not shown in evidence. It is a part of the new allegations that, during the progress of the hearing before the master, Hersey became dissatisfied with the handling of his case, dismissed his counsel, and procured the service of new counsel; that the failure to bring out such additional facts and the change of counsel created prejudice in the master's mind against Hersey, by reason whereof the master did not give proper consideration to the evidence adduced by him, and found against the evidence in the case.

Just when the change of counsel took place does not appear; but it was prior to the hearing had before the master in July, 1916. On that occasion Hersey was represented by the new counsel. So if there was neglect of duty by his former solicitors in the respect named, the hearing of the case on the merits was concluded by the new solicitor, who thereafter had charge of the matter without applying for leave to take steps remedying the effect of the alleged neglect of duty, until at least a year and four months after his employment and some three months after the report and exceptions thereto were filed, and immediately preceding the rendition of the decree. The record discloses no attempt to explain this delay in making the application. The full scope and purpose of the motion are realized when we notice that one of the special prayers of the proposed cross-bill is that, on account of the prejudice and bias of the master, a retrial may be had of the facts and issues involved in the case, and that such retrial may be had before the chancellor. Nothing is shown of record reasonably subjecting the master to criticism in the respect named. So far as appears, he performed his duties fairly, fearlessly, honestly, and well. By the third and fourth paragraphs of the decree, the chancellor very properly disposed of the motion by denying it, and there was no abuse of discretion in so doing.

In his direct examination in defense Hersey testified that, at the time he gave the two deeds to plaintiff Mattie H. Ford, there were several other matters which were embarrassing him. In cross-examination he testified that the property in question in the town of Barre was deeded to him by one Payne. He was then asked whether Payne embarrassed him, and answered, "That was all settled." Being asked if Payne was one of the gentlemen who was embarrassing him, he answered:

"Not in 1905. Q. About that time? A. Five years before that. Q. When did you get settled up with Payne? A. When that deed was given."

Thereupon his counsel objected on the ground of immateriality because of remoteness, and an exception was noted. The next question related to the same subject-matter, and an exception was saved; but the question was not answered. He was asked whether the Payne Case was tried before Mr. Senter as master, and answered in the affirmative. Objection was then made and exception noted. He was further asked whether he had had some experience in making erasures in deeds prior to 1904. Objection was made to the question, but no exception was saved to the ruling.

[2, 3] It is argued that, since one much contested question in the suit at bar was whether Hersey made erasures in the two deeds in controversy, as alleged in the bill, the foregoing evidence relating to the Payne matter was pressed for the purpose of creating prejudice in the mind of the master against him by insinuating that he made erasures in a matter entirely immaterial here, and the reception of the evidence in the circumstances was error. The question asked but not answered could not have resulted in prejudice to the exceptant. This leaves the two exceptions taken after the questions had been answered. The record contains nothing showing that either of these questions was answered before an objection could have been interposed, and it will not be presumed. The answers given were responsive to the questions, and the exceptions were too late to be availing. State v. Ward, 61 Vt. 153, 17 Atl. 483; State v. Fitzgerald, 72 Vt. 142, 47 Atl. 403; State v. Powers, 72 Vt. 168, 47 Atl. 830.

Hersey was asked in direct examination what wages the plaintiff Harry L. Ford received from his different employers while he was living at the witness' home. The master ruled, excluding evidence of this character pointing to the time prior to 1904, when the deeds were given by the latter to Mrs. Ford, and an exception was noted. An offer was made to show the actual amount of money paid in to the witness by Harry L. while he lived in the family there with the witness, the amount per week, and the different amounts from the time he went there and during the time he lived there. This offer was excluded and exception saved. The offer did not include a statement of the amount which defendant purposed to show was paid in either as a whole or at the different times. The object of the evidence which defendant was trying to introduce was to show the sum total and the different sums so paid in, not the fact of there being money paid in by Harry L. This being so, we cannot say that any harm resulted to defendants from the ruling, and the exception is without force.

Defendants Smith took exceptions to the report, and an appeal from the decree; but in argument they only ask that the payment to them by the plaintiffs of the $1,100 and interest mentioned in the decree be made secure by the terms of the decree. In this respect the decree, as rendered, is based upon the principle that he who seeks equity must do equity. Whether this rule, as generally applied, extends far enough to affect the matters in which defendants Smith are here particularly interested, we need not inquire; for not only are the plaintiffs satisfied with its application as made by the chancellor, but consent that the provisions in this respect be made more specific, as desired by the Smiths, if they can be and the decree in its general provisions remain unchanged. By the decree, the deed therein specified as given to them by defendant Hersey is "adjudged to be null and void and of no effect, and is ordered to be expunged from the land records, provided and on condition that the plaintiffs pay to said defendants" Smith the sum specified, within a time limited, with interest thereon, etc. That such payment may be secure as desired by the Smiths, and as consented to by the plaintiffs, this part of the decree should be so amended as to have an alternative provision to the effect that if the said sum with interest thereon be not paid as there ordered, within the new time limited therefor, relief to the plaintiffs as against the said deed from Hersey to defendants Smith is denied, and the bill dismissed as to the latter with their costs. When thus amended, the decree in this regard will conform in substance to decrees as sometimes rendered, when based upon the equitable principle mentioned, and be sufficiently protective of the rights of the parties.

The decree is altered to conform to the views above expressed, and, being so altered, it is affirmed and cause remanded. Let a new time be fixed within which the payment shall be made by the plaintiffs to defendants Smith.

(92 Vt. 501)

SEEVER et al. v. LANG et al.

(Supreme Court of Vermont. Orleans. Nov. 19, 1918.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER \S 814(1)—REMEDIES OF VENDOR—PLEADING.

Recovery of purchase price by vendor, on an executory contract under seal may be had under a general count.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER \S 802—REMEDIES OF VENDOR—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

Where a vendee under a contract for the sale of land takes and retains possession and the promise to pay is absolute, recovery of the purchase price should be allowed, and vendor is not confined to an action for damages.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER \S 269 — REMEDIES OF VENDOR.

When default is made on an executory contract for the sale of land, the vendors may proceed in equity, bring ejectment, or sue for general damages or to recover the purchase money.

4. HUSBAND AND WIFE \S 79 — RIGHTS OF WIFE—CONTRACTS.

A married woman can make contracts and bind herself and her property at law only so far as the statute authorizes her to do so.

5. HUSBAND AND WIFE \S 79 — RIGHTS OF WIFE—COMMON LAW.

When a married woman enters into a contract affecting property not held to her sole and separate use, her responsibility is to be measured by the common law, and not by the statute.

6. HUSBAND AND WIFE §110 — SEPARATE ESTATE.

The real estate of a wife is not held to her sole and separate use, except where there is some provision so limiting it in the contract, deed, or decree by which she acquires it.

7. HUSBAND AND WIFE §79 — RIGHTS OF WIFE—CONTRACTS.

Under G. L. 3521, the capacity of a married woman to make contracts is general, capacity being the rule, and incapacity the exception.

8. HUSBAND AND WIFE §86 — RIGHTS OF WIFE—PURCHASE OF REALTY.

Under G. L. 3521, a married woman may buy real estate and bind herself for its payment, and that she has no separate estate does not affect her personal liability.

9. HUSBAND AND WIFE §159—SURETSHIP FOR HUSBAND.

Where husband and wife deeded land to plaintiffs in consideration of plaintiffs' assuming or paying husband's debts, and plaintiffs gave wife a contract by which they agreed to sell, and she to buy, the land for a certain sum, specified as the amount of husband's debts, the contract was not invalid as making wife surety for her husband's debts, contrary to P. S. 3039 (G. L. 3523), provided she contracted under arrangement with her husband that she could have what she could save out of the property; for in such case the debt would be hers, although it resulted in the payment of his debt.

10. TRIAL §177 — MOTION FOR DIRECTED VERDICT BY BOTH PARTIES—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

In an action against a married woman on a contract for the purchase of realty, that each party moved for a verdict does not amount to a consent to take the case from the jury where defendant requests submission on the issue of defendant's relation to the debt.

11. APPEAL AND ERROR §231(8)—RESERVATION OF EXCEPTIONS—NECESSITY.

Grounds for the granting of a motion for a verdict not made below will not be considered on appeal from refusal to grant motion.

12. HUSBAND AND WIFE §23 — WIFE AS AGENT—AGENT'S INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

A married woman acting as agent for her husband as a disclosed principal may bind herself by contract in her own name.

13. PLEADING §380—ISSUES.

Evidence is inadmissible when outside the issues made by the pleadings.

Exceptions from Orleans County Court; Frank L. Fish, Judge.

Action by H. T. Seaver and others against Lillian A. Lang and others. Verdict for plaintiffs, and defendants bring exceptions. Reversed and remanded.

W. W. Reiriden, of Barton, and E. A. Cook, of Lyndonville, for plaintiffs.

Williams & Smith, of Newport, and F. D. Thompson, of Barton, for defendants.

POWERS, J. In the spring of 1914 the late Frank Lang held title to certain property in Barton. It consisted of a village lot and residence thereon occupied by him and his family, called the home place; a barn on the fair ground near by, called the Holder barn, and a pasture called the Brown pasture. He also owned two valuable horses, one a mare called Delisle, and the other a stallion called Childs. This property was all mortgaged to the Barton Savings Bank & Trust Company to secure Lang's debts to the amount of over $4,000. He owed other notes and bills to various parties, on some of which suits had been brought and his equity in the property mentioned or some of it attached. With his affairs in this situation, he accepted a position in Wisconsin, and went there, leaving his wife and family in Barton living in the home place. Soon after his departure other attachments were put onto his property, and finally Mrs. Lang, the defendant, set herself to the task of straightening out the tangle in her husband's affairs, and saving what she could out of the property. After some discussion, the following arrangement was entered into between the plaintiffs and Mrs. Lang, who, as evidence tended to show, acted upon the authority and approval of her husband: Mr. Seaver took the Brown pasture at $1,250, and he and Mr. Reiriden took the Holder barn at $1,500; both these sums being paid partly in money and partly in canceled debts against Lang. The money involved was used to pay other debts against him. These two properties were conveyed by deed, and the transactions were final. Then Lang and his wife deeded the home place to Seaver, who immediately conveyed a third interest therein to each of the other plaintiffs. The latter, having paid or assumed the other Lang debts, gave Mrs. Lang a land contract for the home place, which she had occupied all the time, and which she continued to occupy until her death as hereinafter stated. The foregoing arrangement was one transaction only; the deed of the home place and the contract to Mrs. Lang being successive steps in it. The contract was nothing more than an arrangement to secure the amount specified as the purchase price therein. By its terms the plaintiffs agreed to sell to Mrs. Lang, and she agreed to buy, the home place for $4,492.83, payable on demand with interest annually. The plaintiffs agreed therein that on payment of this sum and compliance with her other agreements therein they would convey to Mrs. Lang the premises by warranty deed. The amount specified as the purchase price was the remainder of the Lang debts, paid or assumed by the plaintiffs, as they then figured it.

Lang died in 1916, and left an insurance, $1,500 of which was payable to Mrs. Lang. This suit is brought for the recovery of the sum specified as the purchase price in the land contract, and the insurer is summoned as trustee. Mrs. Lang died after the trial below, and her administrator is here defending. The declaration was in the common counts, and the plea was the general issue. The court below ordered a verdict for the plaintiffs, and the case is here on the defendant's exceptions.

[1] When the land contract was offered in evidence, the defendant objected on the grounds that it was an executory contract merely, and that it was under seal, for each of which reasons recovery could not be had under the common counts. On the first of these propositions the defendant cites Hemenway v. Smith, 28 Vt. 701. Just what the court decided in that case was this: That the plaintiff there could not recover the amounts which the defendants agreed to pay him for an assignment of an executory contract of purchase of the so-called Gould farm, under a declaration containing only the general counts there used. But it appears that these were only three in number, one for money had and received, another for use and occupation, and the third for money lent and accommodated. None of these was adapted to a case of the kind then at bar. So the decision goes no further than the one in Wertheim v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 72 Vt. 326, 47 Atl. 1071. The origin and growth of the so-called common counts forms an interesting chapter in the development of our system of pleading; but it is enough here to say that new counts have been from time to time added to the common counts until there is now in use, in some parts of the state at least, a printed form containing a general count adapted to a case of this kind. It must be admitted that this declaration did not originally contain any such count. But this defect was remedied by an amendment.

[2, 3] In this connection it is further urged that a vendor's remedy at law in a case like this is an action for damages for the breach of the executory contract, and that the sum specified cannot be recovered, but only damages represented by the difference between the purchase price and the value of the premises. There are cases apparently holding this doctrine. So far as those are at hand, they are cases where the vendor retains the possession. In such cases the rule just referred to may afford compensation. But where the vendee takes and retains possession, and the promise to pay is positive and absolute, and the position of the parties is unaffected by foreclosure or other proceedings, recovery of the purchase price should be allowed. To refuse it would be to ignore the plain terms of the engagement. The contract before us contains a direct and absolute promise to pay. In such a case we assert the rule approved in Waite v. Stanley, 88 Vt. 407, 92 Atl. 633, taken from Hansbrough v. Peck, 5 Wall. 497, 18 L. Ed. 520. When Mrs. Lang defaulted, the plaintiffs had several remedies available: They could proceed in equity, as was done in Paine v. McDowell, 71 Vt. 23, 41 Atl. 1042; they could bring ejectment, as was done in Reynolds v. Bean, 91 Vt. 247, 90 Atl. 1013; they could sue for general damages, as was done in Allen v. Mohn, 86 Mich. 323, 49 N. W. 52, 24 Am. St. Rep. 126; or they could sue for the purchase money. See Arbuckle v. Hawks, 20 Vt. 538.

Assuming that the plaintiffs had done all that the contract required of them, there was nothing for the defendant to do but pay the money. Under our simplified system of pleading, if not before, this could be recovered under an appropriate general count. Such a count was allowed to be filed as an amendment to the original declaration. No question as to the sufficiency of this new count is before us, as the only exception saved was to the action of the court in allowing it to be filed. And in this there was no error. G. L. 1796.

Nor can the contention be sustained that the damages are to be measured by the difference between the value of the premises and the purchase price. The damages are compensatory. Whatever the rule might be when a purchaser surrenders the possession or the vendor secures it, when, as here, the purchaser holds the possession and manifests a purpose to continue to hold it, the recovery is the amount due on the contract.

At the close of the evidence, the defendant moved for a verdict, and, the motion being overruled, excepted.

One of the grounds relied upon in support of this motion is that the defendant, being at the time a married woman, and it not being provided in the contract that the home place was to be conveyed to her sole and separate use, was incapable of making this executory contract and thereby binding herself and her property.

[4, 5] In the consideration of the question thus raised, it must constantly be kept in mind that a married woman can make contracts and bind herself and property at law only so far as the statute authorizes her to do so. Nor should we forget that our holdings are that, when a married woman enters into a contract affecting property not held to her sole and separate use, her responsibility is to be measured by the common law, and not by the statute. Rowley v. Shepardson, 83 Vt. 167, 74 Atl. 1002, 188 Am. St. Rep. 1078; First Nat. Bank v. Bertoll, 87 Vt. 297, 89 Atl. 359, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 590; Barrows v. Dugan's Estate, 88 Vt. 441, 92 Atl. 927; French v. Slack, 89 Vt. 514, 96 Atl. 6.

The determining question then is this: Is this contract one affecting property not held to the sole and separate use of the wife within the meaning of this rule?

[6] That the home place was not then or thereafter to become property held to the sole and separate use of Mrs. Lang is apparent; for the real estate of a wife is not so held except it be that there is some provision so limiting it in the contract, deed, or decree by which she acquires it. Ainger v.

White's Adm'x, 85 Vt. 446, 82 Atl. 666. That a married woman was not, at common law, liable upon an executory contract like this, is not to be doubted. 18 R. C. L. 1281; Warren v. Costello, 109 Mo. 338, 19 S. W. 29, 32 Am. St. Rep. 669; 1 Benj. Sales, § 84. This resulted from her general incapacity to contract, under which she could not create a valid debt against herself (Farrar v. Bessey, 24 Vt. 89), or ratify one thus attempted after she became single (Hayward v. Barker, 52 Vt. 429, 36 Am. Rep. 762).

[7, 8] But under our statute (G. L. 3521) the capacity of a married woman to make contracts is general. Capacity is the rule, and incapacity the exception. She may contract like a single woman, except as forbidden by the statute (Bartholomew v. Allentown Nat. Bank, 260 Pa. 509, 103 Atl. 954; Anderson v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 38 Ind. App. 190, 76 N. E. 811), and except as forbidden by the holdings referred to (Barrows v. Dugan's Estate, 88 Vt. 441, 92 Atl. 927). Under such a statute—the last-named exception aside—a married woman may buy real estate on credit and bind herself for its payment (21 Cyc. 1318), and the fact that she did not have a separate estate would not affect her personal liability (Barrows v. Dugan's Estate, supra).

An examination of our cases above referred to shows that they are founded upon the necessity of protecting the marital rights of the husband in the real estate of the wife. Such rights are still recognized and protected, and cannot be taken away without his consent. But, unless this contract was valid, the husband never acquired any marital rights under it. To assert that his marital rights attached to the home place under the contract here in question is to assert the validity of that contract. If the contract is not valid, it is wholly void. If it is to be tested by common-law rules, it is void, and not voidable. Hayward v. Barker, supra. And if the contract is void as to Mrs. Lang, it is void as to these plaintiffs (18 R. C. L. 1254), and void as to everybody whose rights would be affected by it if valid (6 R. C. L. 591; Kellogg v. Howes, 81 Cal. 170, 22 Pac. 509, 6 L. R. A. 588), and Lang acquired no marital rights under it. It is not necessary, then, in order to protect the husband's rights here, to declare this contract to be void for want of capacity, and the case does not come within the spirit of our previous holdings.

[9] It was also claimed under this exception that this contract was not binding upon Mrs. Lang, because she thereby became holden for her husband's debt, which is expressly prohibited, except by way of mortgage, by P. S. 3039 (G. L. 3523).

In examining this question, attention is to be given to the real purpose and character of the undertaking rather than its form. First Nat. Bank v. Bertoli, 87 Vt. 297, 89

Atl. 359, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 590. As we have already seen, the sum specified as the consideration of the contract was the unpaid balance of Lang's debts. This was what Mrs. Lang agreed to pay. Her evidence tended to show that the entire arrangement was made by her under directions from her husband and for his benefit. That she gave her own promise or obligation, instead of his or a joint one, is unimportant. Unless the debt became her debt, by some arrangement based upon a valid consideration moving to her, it remained his, and her obligation is in essence that of suretyship. Bank v. Bertoli, supra.

But the evidence on this branch of the case was not all one way. There was evidence tending to show that Lang told the defendant that she could have what she could save out of the property. If this was the arrangement between herself and her husband, and she contracted with the plaintiffs with that end in view and on her own account, and for her own benefit, then the debt was hers, and not her husband's, though it resulted or was to result in the payment of his debt. In such circumstances, after the contract with the plaintiffs, Lang's rights in the property were marital only; whereas prior to that contract her rights in the property were marital only. With this conflict in the evidence, it was not error to overrule the defendant's motion so far as it depended upon this point.

[10] The plaintiffs also moved for a verdict at the close of the evidence. Just what took place in this connection is shown by the transcript, which is referred to and made controlling. It was this: The court asked defendant's counsel what question there was for the jury, and the latter replied, "I don't think there is any, if the court takes the view of the law as we do." Then, turning to the plaintiffs, the court asked if they thought there was any question for the jury, and they replied that they did not, and that they joined in the motion and thought a verdict should be ordered for them. Thereupon the court said, "You both agree that there is no question for the jury," and directed the plaintiffs to figure up the amount of their claim immediately. Counsel for the defendant explained:

"I would like to qualify or withdraw one statement, and that is that I thought there was nothing to be submitted to the jury. What I meant was that the plaintiffs' evidence shows that the defendant, if she assumed anything, it was as surety for her husband, and we also claim that she had no legal capacity to make such a contract in regard to real estate; but if the court says that the plaintiffs' evidence tends to show that she did make a contract which she had a right to do, we say that the defendant's evidence tends to show that she was acting as her husband's agent in executing this land contract and doing what she did, and that is a question which should be submitted to the jury, in addition to our claim which shows that she simply was a surety."

Notwithstanding this, the court asserted that both parties had claimed that there was no question for the jury, and in this view ordered a verdict for the plaintiff. The mere fact that each party moved for verdict did not amount to consent that the case should be taken from the jury. It is only when it affirmatively appears that neither party wishes to go to the jury that it is for the court to direct such verdict as in its judgment the evidence requires. Fitzsimmons v. Richardson, 96 Vt. 229, 84 Atl. 811. In the case before us it did not affirmatively appear that both parties assented to the proposition that there was nothing for the jury. The court was mistaken in its assertion that they agreed on this question. The defendant's assent was conditional. When her counsel saw the misapprehension of the court, he immediately explained his position fully and clearly. He was in a position to insist that the question of Mrs. Lang's relation to the debt she agreed to pay should be submitted to the jury, and the question of agency also, if there was any evidence fairly and reasonably tending to establish it.

It is here urged that the contract presented the case of mutual and dependent covenants; that the plaintiffs' engagement to deed and the defendant's promise to pay were dependent; and that no recovery could be had without proof of a tender of a deed or its equivalent.

[11] And this is urged as a reason why the defendant's motion for a verdict should have been granted. But the defendant did not make the point below. The grounds of her motion were there made specific. This was not one of them. Therefore we will not consider it. Spencer v. Potter's Estate, 85 Vt. 1, 80 Atl. 821. And for the same reason the defendant will not now be heard to urge this ground as a reason why the plaintiff's motion for a verdict should not have been granted.

As we have said, the defendant was, at the close of the evidence, in a position to insist that the question of her relation to this debt be submitted to the jury. But the plaintiffs take the position that she has lost this right through the inadequacy of her exceptions. When the court disposed of the plaintiffs' motion by granting it, the presiding judge addressed the jury briefly, explaining the situation, appointed a foreman, and directed him to sign the plaintiffs' verdict. Following this, an exception was taken by the defendant to the refusal of the court "to submit the question of agency to the jury." So far, then, no question but that of agency was saved. But after the verdict had been read by the clerk, another exception was taken, which must have been to the granting of the plaintiff's motion for a verdict, and which was unrestricted. In so construing the record before us, we are not unmindful of the rule that a bill of exceptions is to be construed against the excepting party. But it is to be construed reasonably, and in a way to preserve the rights of all parties so far as its language permits. From the course of the trial, the position taken and adhered to by the defense, and the unrestricted statements of the bill itself, the only reasonable construction of this record is the one we have adopted.

[12] For the reasons hereinbefore stated, this exception is sustained. It was not error to refuse to submit the question of agency. There are, here and there in the transcript, statements which, taken by themselves, could be taken as indicating an agency on the part of Mrs. Lang; but the evidence as a whole is not subject to that interpretation. One acting for a disclosed principal may, if he chooses, bind himself. Bradley v. Blandin, 89 Vt. 542, 95 Atl. 894. And he does bind himself when, as here, the contract is in writing, and in clear and unambiguous language purports to be the engagement of the agent, and not the principal. Story, Agency, par. 269 et seq.; 2 C. J. 814; 21 R. C. L. 848; Cream City Glass Co. v. Friedlander, 84 Wis. 53, 54 N. W. 28, 21 L. R. A. 135, 36 Am. St. Rep. 895; Stackpole v. Arnold, 11 Mass. 27, 6 Am. Dec. 150; Arfridson v. Ladd, 12 Mass. 173; Andrews v. Estes, 11 Me. 267, 26 Am. Dec. 521; Clealand v. Walker, 11 Ala. 1068, 46 Am. Dec. 238; Bank of Rochester v. Monteth, 1 Denio (N. Y.) 402, 43 Am. Dec. 681.

In the contract before us the promise is Mrs. Lang's, not Mr. Lang's; the signature is hers, not his; the seal is hers, not his. In re Barron's Estate, 105 Atl. 255.

[13] There was no error in excluding the evidence regarding the profits made by the plaintiffs on the property when sold. This was wholly outside the issues made by the pleadings, and therefore inadmissible. Brown v. Aitken, 90 Vt. 569, 99 Atl. 265.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

MILES, J., did not sit.

NEWMAN v. GARFIELD.

(Supreme Court of Vermont. Caledonia. Nov. 19, 1918.)

1. STATUTES \S 225 — CONSTRUCTION — STATUTES IN PARI MATERIA.

Statutes in pari materia are to be construed with reference to each other as parts of one system.

2. STATUTES \S 225½ — CONSTRUCTION — PARTICULAR WORDS — CURRENT CONSTRUCTION.

When in a later act on the same general subject the Legislature uses a particular word or form which has been construed by the court, it is to be presumed in the absence of anything to the contrary that it adopted the judicial construction.

3. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES \S 47 — BULK SALES ACT — "FRAUDULENT AND VOID."

P. S. 5010 (G. L. 6013), providing that sales in bulk of merchandise shall be fraudulent and void as against the creditors of the seller unless certain things are done, by the use of the words "fraudulent and void" means constructively fraudulent and voidable upon action by creditor, and as between the parties the transaction is final and binding, with title in the purchaser.

4. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — 230—BULK SALES—RIGHTS OF CREDITOR—REMEDIES.

Since if a debtor makes a sale of his goods fraudulent under Bulk Sales Law, the creditor may under P. S. 1723, hold the purchaser as a trustee, and since under P. S. 5783, the fraudulent seller and purchaser forfeit the value of the goods, and in view of P. S. 2204, creditor defrauded by sale in bulk cannot proceed by attachment, execution, and sale, which give the purchaser no hearing as to whether he had complied with the Bulk Sales Law.

Exceptions from Caledonia County Court; Frank L. Fish, Judge.

Action by R. S. Newman against M. O. Garfield. Verdict for plaintiff, and both parties except. Judgment reversed, and judgment for plaintiff rendered.

Argued before WATSON, C. J., and POWERS, TAYLOR, and MILES, JJ.

Frank D. Thompson, of Barton, and Porter, Witters & Harvey, of St. Johnsbury, for plaintiff.

Elisha May, of St. Johnsbury, and W. W. Reirden, of Barton, for defendant.

POWERS, J. M. H. Lewis was a merchant at West Burke. On July 7, 1916, in good faith and for an adequate price, he sold his stock of goods to this plaintiff, who paid for and took possession of the same, and continued the business in the same store which he rented of Lewis for that purpose. At the time of this transaction Lewis owed the Haskell-Armstrong Company, of Portland, Me., an unpaid bill for merchandise, and that concern brought suit against him and attached the goods in the plaintiff's possession, and, having obtained judgment therein, took out an execution and sold a part of these goods to satisfy the same. The defendant is the deputy sheriff who did the business for the Haskell-Armstrong Company, and the action is tort for the conversion of the goods. The defense is predicated upon a noncompliance by Lewis and the plaintiff with the terms of the Bulk Sales Law (P. S. 5010 [G. L. 6013]).

By that statute it is provided that the sales in bulk of a part or the whole of a stock of merchandise "shall be fraudulent and void as against the creditors of the seller," unless certain things are done by the parties to the sale.

The first important question in the case is as to the true meaning of the terms "fraudulent and void" as here used. Notwithstanding these positive terms, as was said by Judge Poland in Woodcock v. Bolster, 35 Vt. 632, in many cases where statutes use the word "void" it is construed to mean "voidable." Thus in Merrill v. Englesby, 28 Vt. 150, this court had under consideration a statute providing that general assignments should be "null and void as against creditors of said debtors"; and it was held that such assignments were voidable at the instance of creditors. And in the recent case of Tudor v. Tudor, 80 Vt. 220, 67 Atl. 539, 130 Am. St. Rep. 977, this court had under consideration P. S. 5782, which provides that fraudulent conveyances of houses and lands or of goods and chattels shall be, as to the party defrauded, "null and void." Upon full consideration and discussion, it was held that by proper construction the statute made such conveyances voidable merely.

[1] Here, then, is the construction of a statute sufficiently cognate to be in pari materia; and it is the established rule that such statutes are to be construed with reference to each other, as parts of one system. Isham v. Bennington Iron Co., 19 Vt. 230; State v. C. V. Ry. Co., 81 Vt. 463, 71 Atl. 194, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1065. This rule necessarily involves recourse to the construction of such statutes by the courts. Endlich, Interp. par. 367.

[2] So it is that, when in a later act, on the same general subject, the Legislature makes use of a particular word or form of words which the courts have construed, it is to be presumed, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that it used such words in the sense attributed to them by such construction. Whitcomb v. Rood, 20 Vt. 49.

[3] We have no hesitation, therefore, in holding that this statute really means that bulk sales are constructively fraudulent and voidable at the instance of creditors, and that as between the parties the transaction is final and binding, with title passing to the purchaser, where it remains until divested by proceedings instituted by a creditor for that purpose.

This view of the statute is approved in McGreenery v. Murphy, 76 N. H. 338, 82 Atl. 720, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 374, Kelley-Buckley Co. v. Cohen, 195 Mass. 585, 81 N. E. 297, and Rothchild Bros. v. Trewella, 36 Wash. 679, 79 Pac. 490, 68 L. R. A. 281, 104 Am. St. Rep. 973.

The next question of importance relates to the remedy available to the creditor. On this subject the statute in question is silent. It must be taken, therefore, that it was the intent of the Legislature that the creditor should resort to such remedy or remedies as the law then provided in similar cases. Here, again, reference may be had to the statutes on the same or analogous subjects and the remedies therein provided. Thus consistency and harmony throughout a particular topic of the law will be secured. While this statute establishes a new and drastic restraint upon the free disposition of a certain class of property, in essence it is nothing more than a further extension of the general scheme of preventing fraudulent conveyances. So in our search for the proper remedy we look to the law of that subject.

P. S. 1723 provides that a person who holds goods under a title void as to creditors may be held as a trustee thereof, though the defendant could not maintain a suit against him. Here, then, is a plain and convenient remedy; one that provides for an action to which all interested are parties, and in which all questions may be litigated. In ordinary circumstances, at least, it would be complete and adequate. P. S. 5782, as we have seen, refers to fraudulent conveyances of goods and chattels, and P. S. 5783 provides that the parties to such fraudulent transfer shall forfeit the value of such goods and chattels; recovery to be had in an action on the statute, and one-half the recovery to go to the party aggrieved and one-half to the county. Then, too, there is the long-recognized jurisdiction in equity, available at least in cases where in the above remedies might be inadequate. This is the remedy expressly provided by P. S. 2204 for cases where real estate has been conveyed in fraud of creditors. In such cases the creditor obtains and levies his execution upon the land in question, and then proceeds in chancery for the satisfaction of the same. No good reason is suggested why a remedy in chancery should not be available in cases like this, and free use seems to be made of it under bulk sales statutes in other jurisdictions. Squire v. Teller, 185 Mass. 18, 69 N. E. 312, 102 Am. St. Rep. 322; Wheeler & M. Mercantile Co. v. Moon, 49 Mont. 307, 141 Pac. 665; Scheve v. Vanderkolk, 97 Neb. 204, 149 N. W. 401; Daly v. Sumpter Drug Co., 127 Tenn. 412, 155 S. W. 167, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1101.

[4] We are aware that the procedure followed by this defendant has been approved in several of the states having statutes on the subject of bulk sales much like ours. But, in view of the remedies available here, we cannot hold that such procedure was lawful. It gave the plaintiff no opportunity to test any of the questions affecting his title. He could not even show that the terms of the statute had been complied with. His only remedy for an unlawful seizure and sale was by a new and independent proceeding. It is not a sufficient answer to say that the title had not passed to him as against the creditor. It had passed subject to the right to vacate it. And to say that it had not passed on account of a noncompliance with the statute is to assume a fundamental fact that had never been judicially established. It is wholly unnecessary to support the defendant's action in order to protect the creditor. As we have seen, his rights are otherwise protected. And it is to be assumed that the Legislature intended to interfere with the right of contract only so far as was necessary for the creditor's protection.

Nor are we unmindful of the fact that in cases of actual fraud (Hall v. Eaton, 25 Vt. 458), and even in cases of so-called fraud in law (Mills v. Warner, 19 Vt. 609, 47 Am. Dec. 711; Weeks v. Prescott, 53 Vt. 57), we have allowed the creditor to proceed by attachment and sale. But we do not think the rule should be extended, even if its soundness is admitted.

These views are conclusive of the rights of the parties so far as these proceedings are concerned, and the other questions discussed by counsel need not be considered.

Judgment reversed, and judgment for the plaintiff for the sum of $817.75, with interest thereon from February 17, 1917, and his costs.

(42 R. I. 30)

GEOFFROY et al. v. NEW YORK, N. H. & H. R. CO. (No. 5217.)

(Supreme Court of Rhode Island. Dec. 5, 1918.)

1. RAILROADS \Leftrightarrow 348(8) — INJURIES AT CROSSINGS — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — EVIDENCE.

In action for death of automobile driver in collision with train at crossing, assuming that he neither heard nor saw the train, held, that he was guilty of contributory negligence, in that he must have neglected to take any precaution whatever for his own safety.

2. RAILROADS \Leftrightarrow 330(2) — CROSSING ACCIDENTS — RELIANCE ON OPEN GATES.

A traveler cannot rely exclusively on the fact that grade crossing gates are open, but must, to some extent, use his senses before going upon the track.

3. RAILROADS \Leftrightarrow 347(11) — INJURIES AT CROSSING — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — EVIDENCE.

In determining contributory negligence of an automobile driver struck by a train at a grade crossing, the fact that the gates were open may be considered by the jury.

4. RAILROADS \Leftrightarrow 330(2) — CROSSING ACCIDENTS — RELIANCE ON OPEN GATES.

Where automobile driver, with unobstructed view for 700 feet, drove on track at 12 miles an hour, without stopping, looking, or listening, immediately after the engineer, seeing that the gates were open, had blown his whistle with more than usual force, the driver was not entitled to rely exclusively on the fact that the gates were open, since an ordinarily prudent man would have looked before going on the track.

Exceptions from Superior Court, Kent County; Chester W. Barrows, Judge.

Action by Alfred Geoffroy and others against the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company. On plaintiff's exceptions. Exceptions overruled, and case remitted, with directions.

Quinn & Kernan, of Providence, for plaintiffs.

Eugene J. Phillips, of New Haven, for defendant.

STEARNS, J. This is an action of trespass on the case for negligence, brought by the plaintiffs, the heirs and next of kin of one Ephrem Geoffroy, who was killed on the night of December 21, 1917, by a passenger train of the defendant. The accident occurred on the grade crossing in the village of Arctic, where River street, a state highway, crosses the railroad at grade. At this place the railroad, a single track line, runs north and south, and River street crosses the railroad at a slight angle from the southwest to northeast. South of the crossing on the west side of the track is the Arctic passenger station, a small wooden building, the center of which is 114 feet from the center of the crossing. East of the railroad, and running parallel to it for 100 feet south from the crossing, there is an unnamed street, a town highway, which approaches the railroad from the east and joins River street just east of the crossing. Between this street and the railroad there is a board fence, which continues up to a point opposite the south end of the crossing planks. This fence is about 23 feet from the nearest rail, and varies in height at different places from 5.9 feet to 6.9 feet. On the east side of the unnamed street there is a stone store, called the Arctic store, the northern side of which is about 100 feet south of the northerly end of the board fence above mentioned. At the Arctic store the town highway leaves the line of the railroad and bears away from the railroad in an easterly direction. Just south of the crossing a spur track leaves the main line track, extending southerly and on the east of the main track, and parallel to it. On the easterly side of this spur track, and about 400 feet south of the crossing, there is another building, described as the "store house," "cotton house," or "waste house." The crossing is planked to a width of 52 feet, and there are crossing gates, which are operated by hand. The view from the center of the crossing looking south extends for 714 feet. The view from the corner of the fence looking south is unobstructed, and is somewhat more extended. There is no obstruction to the view at any point from the corner of the fence to the rail; north of the crossing the track is straight and the view is unobstructed. On the westerly side of River street, and 104 feet west of the crossing, is the home and grocery store of Joseph E. Maynard, the employer of Ephrem Geoffroy. The train was a regular express train from Willimantic to Providence, which did not stop at Arctic station. It was due to pass this crossing at 8:07 p. m. each evening, and this fact was known to Ephrem Geoffroy, who was familiar with the crossing, over which he had occasion to pass frequently.

On the night of the accident Geoffroy, who was driving an automobile delivery truck, approached the railroad crossing from the east on the town highway. The train was about 30 minutes late and was running at the rate of about 45 miles an hour. The railroad gates were operated by hand by the station agent during the day and by a night-crossing tender during the night. This night-crossing tender, who was called as a witness by the plaintiff, testified that at the time of the accident the gates were not lowered on the approach of the train; that he was in and out of the station and on the platform; the electric alarm bell did not ring as usual, and he first heard the locomotive whistle when the train was at the waste house, and it was then too late for him to get to the crossing and lower the gates in time; that the engineer, perceiving that the gate was up, continued to blow his whistle, after passing by the waste house, up to the crossing.

Joseph E. Maynard testified that Geoffroy, who was 21 years old, had worked for him soliciting orders and delivering goods for a year and a half; that the automobile was a Ford delivery truck, open body, with a closed-in winter top. There was an isinglass curtain on the left of the driver's seat, and the side to the right of the driver was open. There was a curtain at the rear of the driver's seat, which separated the driver's seat from the body of the truck. Maynard was standing outside the doorway of his store, and saw the top of the automobile, which was moving at the time in front of the stone store, and at the same time heard the whistle of the train, which was then at the cotton house. The train was running 45 or 50 miles an hour; the automobile was running about 12 miles an hour, and kept the same speed from the time he first saw it until the collision. When the machine turned at the corner of the fence, the locomotive was at the Arctic station. Geoffroy usually finished his work about 9 p. m., and left the machine in back of the store. A boy, who was not produced as a witness, was riding with Geoffroy at the time of the accident.

Joseph Potvin, an overseer in the Royal Mill was walking toward the crossing on the road opposite Maynard's store, and saw the lights of the automobile when the machine turned the corner at the end of the fence near the crossing. At this time the locomotive was in front of the railroad station. He stood there waiting for the train to pass. The gates were up, with red light on top, and he saw the engine strike the automobile. He heard the locomotive whistle when he was near a telephone post, between Maynard's store and the crossing, and it was about three seconds after he heard the whistle that he saw the lights of the automobile as it came around the corner of the fence.

Arthur Vanasse was standing in front of Maynard's store, talking with Maynard, and heard the train whistle somewhere in the vicinity of the cotton house. When he first saw the train the locomotive was passing the station, and the automobile was then coming train was running between 40 and 50 miles an hour.

Arselia Antaya, bookkeeper for Maynard, saw the accident. She was standing inside the store, looking out of a window, and could see the station and the board fence. The weather was cold, and the door and window were closed. She heard the train coming, and saw the top of the machine on the curve, and then heard the crash. She heard the rattle of the train, but did not hear any whistle. The train was at the station at the time she saw the automobile turning the curve by the fence. She was watching the train, and consequently did not see the automobile go on the track.

This includes all of the testimony in regard to the happening of the accident, and at the conclusion of the plaintiffs' testimony the trial court granted the motion of the defendant for a nonsuit on the ground that the plaintiffs' intestate was guilty of contributory negligence. The case is now before this court on the exception of the plaintiffs to the action of the court in granting a nonsuit.

There is no conflict in the evidence. The deceased was familiar with the surroundings, and knew that he was approaching the railroad crossing, which was a place of danger. There was nothing unusual to distract his attention. As he came up the grade by the Arctic store he knew that the board fence along the railroad track obstructed his view of the track from the crossing to the south. As he turned at the store there was a level stretch of road for 100 feet to the end of the fence, and the view of the track to the north after he left the corner of the store was unobstructed, so that when he reached the end of the fence near the railroad crossing he knew that the track was clear to the north, and the only direction from which danger was to be apprehended was from the south. When he turned the corner at the store he was 100 feet from the crossing, and the locomotive at that time was at or near the cotton house, about 426 feet south from the center of the crossing, behind him and running north in the same direction he was traveling. The whistle was blown repeatedly, and the only noise was that coming from the train and from the operation of the automobile. It seems almost incredible that the deceased did not hear the whistle before he turned at the corner of the fence, and the fact that the boy who was riding with the deceased was not called as a witness, and that no explanation was given of the failure to call this witness, who presumably could throw some light on the situation, furnishes a basis for the conclusion that the deceased did hear the whistle and decided to take a chance.

[1] However this may be, we assume that the deceased did not hear the warning and glass window of his curtain he had a clear and unobstructed view of the track to the south for a distance of more than 711 feet. He was then about 23 feet from the railroad, and his automobile was running about 10 miles an hour, at such slow speed that it could easily have been brought to a stop within a few feet of the corner. If the deceased had heard nor saw the train until it was too late to avoid a collision, the conclusion is unavoidable that he neglected to take any precaution whatever for his own safety, and that he disregarded the opportunity to protect himself from danger by looking south of the track to the south, and relied entirely on the fact that the crossing gates were closed.

The plaintiffs claim that when the crossing gates are open a traveler on the highway is relieved from the obligation of approaching the railroad track to look ahead, and that in such circumstances the question of his contributory negligence is a question for the jury. In support of these propositions they rely on the cases of Wilson v. N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R. Co., 18 R. I. 29 Atl. 258, and 18 R. I. 598, 29 Atl. 300.

The Wilson Case first came before the court on demurrer to the declaration. The court held that the leaving open of the gates was in effect an invitation, or, strictly speaking an implied assurance to travelers on the highway that the crossing might safely be crossed. The plaintiff in that case was a passenger in a large automobile which was struck by a locomotive at a railroad crossing. The demurrer was overruled and it was held that the question of the plaintiff's contributory negligence was for the jury. In discussing the effect of certain decisions of other jurisdictions, the court used language which perhaps not unfairly may be understood as approving the doctrine that in every such case the question of contributory negligence is for the jury. When the case again came before the court (18 R. I. 598, 29 Atl. 300) it was on the petition of defense for a new trial after verdict for plaintiff by jury. The opinion of the court in the latter case, as in the first case, was delivered by Matteson, C. J. Although the court at page 605 of 18 R. I. (29 Atl. 300) affirms the decision above referred to on demurrer, it nevertheless qualifies what otherwise might be regarded as a statement of general rule as follows:

"The fact that the gates were open and attended was evidence of negligence. To relieve itself from the charge of negligence in leaving the gates open, it was necessary for the defendant to show that the other warning of the approach of the train were such that the plaintiff should have heard or perceived them in the exercise of due care. The jury were to determine that closed gates would be but one means of notifying travelers of danger; that if they were notified by the ringing of the bell or by blowing of the whistle or by their vision or by any other means, that would be sufficient; because if the traveler had notice in any way of the approach of the train it would be contributory negligence for him to cross the track, and it would matter not that the defendant might have been negligent. We think this instruction was correct and was sufficiently favorable to the defendant."

[2] The Wilson Case does not support the contention of the plaintiffs. As the closing of the gates is simply one means of notifying a traveler of danger, the traveler cannot rely exclusively on the fact that the gates are open, but must to some extent use his senses before going on to the railroad track.

[3] The fact that the gates are open is an important fact for consideration in the determination of the question whether the deceased exercised due care. The weight properly to be given to this fact necessarily will vary in different cases and will be affected by consideration of the location of the gates, whether on a street in a populous city or in the country, the presence or absence of traffic on the highway at the particular time and place, the presence or absence of obstructions near the track, the presence or absence of a gateman, etc. If the facts are in controversy or if fair-minded men can draw different conclusions from facts which are not controverted the question of contributory negligence would be then properly submitted to a jury.

[4] In the present case, however, there is no dispute in regard to the facts. In the circumstances the deceased could not rely absolutely on the fact that the gates were open and fall altogether to use his senses to ascertain whether the track was clear. If he had looked down the track to the south at a time he was in a place of safety, he would have seen the train and could have stopped his car in safety. He did not look, but drove on to a dangerous crossing without taking precautions which he should have done. No reasonably prudent man, in the circumstances disclosed, would have gone onto the tracks without looking, and, such being the case, as the plaintiffs have failed to show that the deceased was in the exercise of due care, there was no error in the granting of the nonsuit.

Following are some of the cases cited by the defendant in its brief which are in accord with the conclusion of this court in the case at bar: Ellis v. B. & M. R. R., 169 Mass. 600, 48 N. E. 839; Lundergan v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R., 203 Mass. 400, 89 N. E. 625; Koch v. So. Cal. R. R. Co., 148 Cal. 677, 84 Pac. 176; Coyle v. B. & M. R. R., 77 N. H. 604, 94 Atl. 509; So. Ry. v. Jones, 118 Va. 685, 88 S. E. 178; Schaub v. Kansas City So. Ry. Co., 133 Mo. App. 444, 113 S. W. 1163; Lindsay v. Penn. R. R. Co., 78 N. J. Law, 704, 75 Atl. 912; Schnackenberg v. D. L. & W. R. R., 86 N. J. Law, 517, 93 Atl. 701; Romeo v. Boston & Me. R. R., 87 Me. 540, 33 Atl. 24;

Hayes v. N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R. Co., 91 Conn. 301, 99 Atl. 694.

The exception of the plaintiffs is overruled, and the case is remitted to the superior court with direction to enter judgment for the defendant on the nonsuit.

(43 R. I. 17)

MERCURIO v. BOARD OF CANVASSERS AND REGISTRATION OF CITY OF PROVIDENCE. (No. 804.)

(Supreme Court of Rhode Island. Dec. 4, 1918.)
ELECTIONS — 181 — BALLOTS — "CANCEL NAME."

A wavering line passing through 11 of the 12 letters of a name, but by a depression just clearing one letter satisfies Gen. Laws 1909, c. 11, § 46, providing that to cancel a name, within the secret ballot law, the voter shall draw a pencil mark through the full name.

Certiorari by Giuseppe A. Mercurio against the Board of Canvassers and Registration of the City of Providence. Record of board quashed in part.

Pettine & De Pasquale, of Providence, for petitioner.

Elmer S. Chace, City Sol., and Alexander L. Churchill, both of Providence, for respondent.

VINCENT, J. This is a petition for a writ of certiorari, brought by Giuseppe A. Mercurio, of the city of Providence, against the board of canvassers and registration of said city. The petition sets forth that the petitioner was a candidate for councilman in the Ninth ward of said city at the election held on November 5, 1918; that his name appeared upon the ballots in the Democratic column as such candidate, and that in the Republican column appeared the name of Thomas F. Black as a candidate for the same office; that the board of canvassers and registration on November 8, 1918, counted the votes cast at said election, including those cast for the petitioner and the said Thomas F. Black, and announced that the number of votes cast for the petitioner was 346 and for the said Thomas F. Black 347. The petition further sets forth that 1 of the ballots counted for Thomas F. Black by said board of canvassers and registration should have been counted for the petitioner, Mercurio.

At the hearing before us 2 ballots were presented and marked respectively Petitioner's Exhibit 1 and Respondents' Exhibit 1. There is some conflict of testimony as to which of these two ballots is the one alleged by the petitioner to have been improperly counted for the said Thomas F. Black. Without discussing the evidence in detail, we think that we must hold, upon the testimony offered, that the ballot marked Petitioner's Exhibit 1 is the ballot referred to. In the Petitioner's Exhibit 1 the name of Thomas F. Black, in the Republican column, appears to have a black penciled line passing through Democratic column. The line passing through the name of Thomas F. Black is not straight. It is wavering, and at one point becomes sufficiently depressed to clear the letter "o" in the first name, at the same time preserving its contact with all of the other letters.

The board of canvassers and registration counted this ballot for Thomas F. Black for councilman, on the ground that the line as drawn did not sufficiently comply with the statute, and therefore did not effect the cancellation of that name. The statute (chapter 11, § 46, Gen. Laws of R. I. 1909) provides that "to cancel a name within the meaning of this chapter the voter shall draw a pencil mark through the full name," and the respondents now claim that, inasmuch as one portion of the line falls below one of the letters of the name, there is no cancellation within the meaning and intent of the statute, and that such ballot should be counted for Thomas F. Black.

We think that the cancellation upon this ballot, as described, is a substantial compliance with the words of the statute which we have above quoted. The letters composing the name of Thomas F. Black upon the ballot are not large, and to say that the failure of the canceling line to cross a single letter thereof would render nugatory the act of the voter would be giving to the statute a more narrow construction than could have been intended or would be reasonable. It requires some skill to make, with a pencil, a comparatively straight line through a name composed of 12 small letters, and we do not think that the statute should be construed with such strictness that the failure to cross one letter of the name should render ineffectual the act of the voter.

We think that the ballot, Petitioner's Exhibit 1, should be counted for the petitioner, Giuseppe A. Mercurio.

So much of the record of the board of canvassers and registration as declares that the petitioner received 346 votes and the said Thomas F. Black 347 votes is quashed.

(79 N. H. 83)

FIFIELD v. MAYER et al.

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Rockingham. Nov. 6, 1918.)

1. SUBROGATION § 7(7) — MORTGAGE NOTE SURETIES—VOLUNTEERS.

Sureties paying a real estate mortgage note and taking a mortgage therefor are not volunteers loaning to mortgagor, but are entitled to subrogation to rights of the mortgagee whose mortgage was paid by the money they guaranteed, as against a holder of an equitable lien whose rights were unaffected by the transaction.

2. SUBROGATION § 7(7) — SURETIES — PAYMENT—IGNORANCE OF LIEN.

The fact that sureties paying a real estate mortgage note were negligent in not discovering they guaranteed, the lienor's rights are affected thereby.

Exceptions from Superior Court, Fham County; Allen, Judge.

Action by C. F. Fifield against E. D. and another to enforce a mechanic's lien involving a question of subrogation of a Judgment for the defendant surety plaintiff excepts. Exceptions over Judgment for the sureties.

Action to enforce a lien under P. S. In pursuance of a contract for equipment between the parties, the defendant furnishes labor and material on the plaintiff's theater building, for which the defendant claims.

The following facts were reported by the referee: The defendant Mayer bought theater property some time previous to 1915. At that time it was subject to a mortgage to secure a note due the Union Five Cent Savings Bank for $2,500. On 1915 Mayer paid $1,000 of this loan and a new note secured by a mortgage on the property for the balance $1,500. On 1915, Mayer entered into a contract with the firm of Kelly Bros. for the construction of the theater building. On July 20, 1915, Mayer gave Kelly Bros. a mortgage in the sum of $30,000 on the property, conditioned to secure their claim for the construction of the theater building and the mortgage, and on the same day a mortgage for $1,500 of the Union Five Cent Savings Bank was assigned to Kelly Bros. On November 1, 1915, Kelly Bros., having completed their contract, were pressing for a settlement. On November 6, 1915, Mayer executed a mortgage to the Arden Savings Bank, to secure a loan of $14,000, but did not receive the money until 1915. On November 19, 1915, Mayer procured a loan from the Union Five Cent Savings Bank of Exeter for $5,500; the defendants Cunningham, Nute, Folsom, and Sawyer signed the note as sureties. On November 19, 1915, Mayer, having secured the above $5,500 loan from the Union Five Cent Savings Bank, gave it to the Kelly Bros.' office. There was present a representative of the Amoskeag Savings Bank with the $14,000 borrowed of that bank, and with the proceeds of these two loans paid the Kelly Bros. their bill in the sum of $16,887.16, which sum included the mortgage note of $1,500, assigned by the Union Five Cent Savings Bank to the Kelly Bros. On July 20, 1915, and which mortgage was discharged by Kelly Bros.; and out of the same funds he paid the other bills for labor and material. The above-named sureties, when they signed the $5,500 note to the Union Five Cent Savings Bank at the request of Mayer, were informed by him that t

For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes.

ceeds of the note were to clean up Kelly Bros. and leave nothing against the theater. They did not know of the mortgage of the Amoskeag Savings Bank and had no knowledge of the several builders' liens on the theater property, and they made no actual investigation or inquiries as to the condition of the title. When they signed the note, Mayer agreed to secure them by a mortgage on the theater property, which he afterwards did on the 22d day of November, subject to the mortgage of the Amoskeag Savings Bank. They have since paid the $5,500 note. It is found that they were negligent in not ascertaining the existence of the plaintiff's lien. The court, Allen, J., found they were entitled to subrogation to the rights of Kelly under his mortgage, and the plaintiff excepted.

Samuel K. Bell and Sleeper & Brown, all of Exeter (Wm. H. Sleeper, of Exeter, orally), for plaintiff.

Scammon & Gardner and Arthur O. Fuller, all of Exeter, for defendants.

WALKER, J. The defendants claim they are entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee Kelly whose mortgage and liens were paid by the bank's money for which they were sureties and which they have paid to the bank, while the plaintiff claims that his lien is superior to the defendants' mortgage, which ought not to be treated as a prior incumbrance or to occupy the position of the former mortgage which was discharged. Upon these evidentiary facts which were reported by a referee, the court found that the defendants were entitled to subrogation in accordance with their claim. To this finding the plaintiff excepted.

[1] The plaintiff's positions are that when the original Kelly mortgage was discharged his lien was thereby advanced and was no longer subject to that incumbrance; that the mortgage to the defendants, which is subject to the plaintiff's lien, was what they contracted for; and that, having no interest in the discharged mortgage, they are not equitably entitled to subrogation. In short, the claim is that in paying or furnishing security for the payment of the Kelly mortgage they were what is termed "volunteers" having no right to redeem from that mortgage, and consequently no right of subrogation. It may be conceded that merely furnishing the money for the payment of a mortgage debt upon receiving a new mortgage as security for the money advanced does not entitle one to the benefit of the original security by way of subrogation. There is no equity in relieving one from the consequences resulting from his voluntary contract in such a case. Insurance Co. v. Middleport, 124 U. S. 584, 8 Sup. Ct. 625, 81 L. Ed. 537. The question, then, is whether the defendants were mere volunteers in furnishing the money by which the first mortgage was paid. The answer to that question makes it necessary to ascertain what the arrangement or contract was which resulted in the discharge of one mortgage and the giving of another.

It is not disputed that the sureties signed the note in question at the request of Mayer upon his representation that, upon the application of the money thus secured in payment of the claims of Kelly, the land would be clear of all incumbrances; in other words, that the mortgage he proposed to give them would be a first mortgage. The fact that there was another mortgage on the premises, which Mayer did not disclose, is unimportant in this case, as there is no contention in regard to it. It is clear that the arrangement was that, as security for their liability on the note, they were to have in practical effect the same rights in the land under their mortgage that Kelly had under his. And such would have been the result of the transaction if it had not been for the plaintiff's lien, of the existence of which the sureties were ignorant and which rendered their mortgage worthless. Upon this state of facts, the law seems to be well established that the sureties are not mere volunteers loaning their money to the debtor and taking a mortgage subject to all previous liens, but that they are entitled to subrogation to the Kelly mortgage as against the plaintiff's lien, whose existing equitable rights are not affected thereby. His security is not lessened by the substitution. His position is the same it was before the Kelly mortgage was discharged.

In Hammond v. Barker, 61 N. H. 53, it was held that if A., holding a mortgage on the premises of B., subject to one to C., in ignorance of a subsequent attachment of the premises by C. on a different debt, release his mortgage and take a new one for the same consideration, equity will as against the attachment restore the lien of his first mortgage; and if D., in ignorance of such attachment, pay to C. the amount of his mortgage, which is thereupon discharged, and take a new one from B. for the money so paid to C., he will be regarded as the equitable assignee of the mortgage to C., and will be subrogated to the original rights of C. therein. The principle applied in that case is decisive of the same question presented in this case. The apparent purpose of the parties to the transaction and the consideration for the sureties signing the note to the bank was, not merely the wish to assist the debtor, but to be protected by succeeding to Kelly's rights under his mortgage. In the case above referred to, the consideration which induced D. to pay the mortgage debt to C., who thereupon discharged the mortgage, was that the new mortgage he took from B. was deemed to stand in the place of C.'s mortgage, in accordance with the presumed intention of the parties. Other cases sustaining the same principle are Stantons v. Thompson, 49 N. H. 272; Buchanan v. Balkum, 60 N. H. 406;

Vittum, 71 N. H. 466, 52 Atl. 848, 93 Am. St. Rep. 561; Levy v. Martin, 48 Wis. 198, 4 N. W. 35; Sidener v. Pavey, 77 Ind. 241; Wilkins v. Gibson, 113 Ga. 31, 38 S. E. 374, 84 Am. St. Rep. 204; Gans v. Thieme, 93 N. Y. 225; Farm Land Co. v. Elsbree, 55 Kan. 562, 40 Pac. 906; Homeopathic Ins. Co. v. Marahall, 32 N. J. Eq. 104; 3 Pom. Eq. § 1212; 37 Cyc. 468. Cases like Rice v. Winters, 45 Neb. 517, 63 N. W. 830, Kitchell v. Mudgett, 37 Mich. 81, Fort Dodge Association v. Scott, 86 Iowa, 431, 53 N. W. 288, and Sandford v. McLean, 8 Paige, 116, 23 Am. Dec. 773, if in conflict with the foregoing views, cannot be followed. Whether, in view of the facts involved in those cases, they may be distinguished, it is not necessary to inquire.

[2] The finding of the referee that the defendants were negligent in not discovering that the plaintiff had a lien upon the land when they took their mortgage does not constitute a reason why he should have the benefit of the money they advanced for the discharge of the Kelly mortgage. The effect of a failure to examine the records upon one's right to subrogation was a question presented by counsel in Hammond v. Barker, supra (see 131 Briefs & Cases 325, 351), but it was not considered to be of sufficient importance to defeat the application of the doctrine of subrogation. Indeed, in most of the cases upon this subject it is apparent that the mistake of the party claiming subrogation might have been avoided by reasonable investigation as to the state of the title. The absence of such investigation does not prejudice the second or subsequent lienholder; for, if his lien were discovered, the party paying off the first mortgage by taking an assignment of it would be preferred to the lienholder, while if it were not discovered the latter suffers no damage in his security by a decree giving the former the rights of the first mortgagee by an assignment of it, or, what amounts to the same thing, by an order of subrogation. The principle is that the lienholder's equitable rights are not infringed, impaired, or in any respect changed by the mere fact that the other party was negligent of his own rights in not discovering the existence of the lien. In Sheldon, subsec. 43, it is said that—

"The mere fact that the loss of the party seeking to be subrogated arose from his own negligence will not debar him from the right, unless its enforcement would be prejudicial to others who are not in fault."

Equity does not require that the plaintiff should be enriched in consequence of the misplaced confidence of the sureties in the untrue statement of the debtor, or in consequence of their neglect to ascertain by independent research that it was untrue. Emmert v. Thompson, 49 Minn. 386, 392, 52 N. W. 31, 32 Am. St. Rep. 566; McKenzie v.

the case of Bohn Door Co. v. Case, 42 Neb. 281, 297, 60 N. W. 576, in which a contrary view is entertained, is not of convincing force. The mistake of the sureties as to the condition of the title induced by the evident fraud of the debtor did not in equity give the plaintiff a title which he would not otherwise have had, and does not constitute a defense to their claim to subrogation. To hold otherwise would render the doctrine of subrogation ineffective in all cases where a second recorded mortgage is in force, of the existence of which the first mortgagee is ignorant, if he discharges his mortgage upon receiving a new mortgage for the same consideration, upon the mistaken idea that no other incumbrance existed. To prevent such an injustice equity affords relief.

Exception overruled; judgment for the sureties.

All concurred.

(79 N. H. 37)

POTTER v. MOODY. (No. 1528.)

(Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Rockingham. Nov. 6, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶1060(1)—HARMLESS ERROR—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL—UNWARRANTED INFERENCE FROM EVIDENCE.

Argument of counsel, urging jury to draw unwarranted inference from appearance of writing in evidence to the effect that it was not a copy but an original letter, furnishes no ground for setting aside verdict; the inference to be drawn from the appearance of the letter being a question of law.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶907(2)—ERRORS OF LAW—CORRECTION BY TRIAL COURT—PRESUMPTION.

Statement of counsel in argument that, if fact that defendant was taken sick during trial had been brought to attention of trial court, trial might have been delayed, was, if incorrect, nothing more than an erroneous statement of law which in the absence of evidence will be presumed to have been corrected by trial court's instructions.

Transferred from Superior Court, Rockingham County; Branch, Judge.

Action by Wilbur L. Potter against Dora Moody. Defendant excepted to argument of plaintiff's counsel, and case was transferred. Exceptions overruled.

Action on the case to recover, on the ground of misrepresentations, a portion of the consideration paid for a farm. The defendant testified that, immediately after receiving a notice from the plaintiff rescinding the contract, she had an attorney write a letter for her to the plaintiff which she signed and handed to him. The plaintiff denied receiving it. The defendant introduced in evidence an exhibit which she alleged was a copy of this letter. There was no evidence offered to contradict the exhibit as a copy. Relative to this exhibit being a copy of the letter, the plaintiff's counsel argued as follows:

"There is one very significant fact about that letter. That letter isn't a copy, it is the original. You can tell by looking at it that it is not a carbon copy; you can tell by looking at it, it is the original document."

To this argument the defendant excepted.

On the day of the trial the defendant's husband returned to his house at Newburyport to obtain an unrecorded deed to be used as evidence in the case. His daughter brought the deed to the court, but he, as claimed, was suddenly taken sick and did not return. Counsel for plaintiff in argument commented upon his absence as follows:

"I very much regret, as I said before, that Mr. Corthell is not here, or Mr. Moody is not here. We are sorry he is sick and surprised that he was taken sick so quickly; over here all right yesterday morning apparently. They need not have gone on with this trial unless they chose to. If he had been taken sick and it was brought to the attention of this court, under certain rules they might have had the trial delayed."

Excepted to by the defendant.

Scammon & Gardner, of Exeter, for plaintiff.

Sleeper & Brown, of Exeter (Wm. H. Sleeper, of Exeter, orally), for defendant.

PLUMMER, J. [1] The defendant excepted because counsel for the plaintiff stated in argument that an exhibit introduced in evidence by the defendant, purporting to be a copy of a typewritten letter, was not a copy, but was the original; that you could tell by looking at it that it was not a carbon copy. It does not appear that the exhibit was introduced as a carbon copy, but simply as a copy of a typewritten letter. While the appearance of the exhibit might furnish evidence to prove that it was not a carbon copy, it could not be determined by its appearance that it was not a copy, because the typist may have written the original, and then written a copy from that, instead of making a carbon copy at the same time the original was written. Counsel asked the jury to draw an inference from the evidence that could not properly be drawn. Whether an inference can be drawn from the evidence is a question of law, and argument of counsel, urging the jury to draw an inference not warranted by the evidence furnishes no ground for setting aside the verdict. Mitchell v. Railroad, 68 N. H. 96, 117, 34 Atl. 674; Conn. River Power Co. v. Dickinson, 75 N. H. 353, 358, 74 Atl. 585; Turner v. Cochecho Mfg. Co., 75 N. H. 521, 523, 77 Atl. 990. If the defendant had regarded the unwarranted inference made by the plaintiff's counsel prejudicial to her case, upon request, the court in the charge to the jury would undoubtedly have corrected the error. Cavanaugh v. Railroad, 76 N. H. 68, 79 Atl. 694; Gosselin v. F. M. Hoyt Shoe Co., 78 N. H. 149, 151, 97 Atl. 744.

[2] The second exception of the defendant cannot be sustained. The statement of counsel in relation to the postponement of the trial under certain rules, if incorrect, could be nothing more than an erroneous statement of law, which, in the absence of evidence, it is presumed was corrected by instructions to the jury. Leavitt v. Telephone Co., 72 N. H. 290, 292, 56 Atl. 462; Seeton v. Dunbarton, 73 N. H. 134, 137, 59 Atl. 944; Curtis v. Railroad, 78 N. H. 116, 97 Atl. 743. Exceptions overruled.

YOUNG, J., absent. The others concurred.

(117 Me. 577)

BAILEY v. MAINE CENT. R. CO.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Nov. 27, 1918.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT §326(1)—RENTING ON SHARES—LANDLORD'S RIGHT TO HAY.

Under a farm lease for a second term, and in view of the landlord's letters, held, that the tenant was entitled to the hay crop for the year and could remove it from the premises and sell to a third person.

Report from Supreme Judicial Court, Penobscot County, at Law.

Actions of replevin by Edwin G. Bailey against the Maine Central Railroad Company. Reported by agreement. Judgments for defendant.

Argued before SPEAR, BIRD, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

Percy A. Hasty, of Dexter, and Gillin & Gillin, of Bangor, for plaintiff.

Morse & Cook and Fellows & Fellows, all of Bangor, for defendant.

PER OURIAM. Two actions of replevin between the same parties, reported by agreement to this court for determination. The plaintiff, Edwin G. Bailey, replevined from the Maine Central Railroad Company two carloads of hay, the first car consisting of 36 tons, and the second carload consisting of 12 tons of hay. The plaintiff leased a farm to O. H. Southard, and Southard sold the hay to one Bean, whose possession of the hay was interrupted by these suits. There were two leases, one in 1914, the other in 1915. The plaintiff claims:

"That the agreement and understanding was for the lease of 1915, made on the 18th day of November, that the same amount of corn was to be left in the silo and the same amount of wood to be left in the shed and the hay and straw cut in 1915 was to be left in the barn. While the corn and wood was not mentioned in the lease of 1915, Southard left them. Southard left the same amount he found there in 1914 and which was there under the 1915 lease, but claimed the hay, and this is the only controversy, as to who was the owner of the hay cut in the summer of 1916."

The first lease covered the period from November 1, 1914, to November 1, 1915, and read as follows:

"Sangerville, Me., Oct. 19, 1914.

"Know all men be these presents that I Edwin G. Bailey have this day leased my Farm to C. H. Southard of Easton, Me. One year (said farm is located in Sangerville on road running from Silver's Mills to Dover) together with all the farming tools, One pair Horses now on farm Dairy Utencils now on farm this years crop Hay, together with grain and straw three acres inclage corn in silow eight cows or their equivalent. The same amount of wood to be left as when taken. Said Farm is to be carried on in a husbandlike manner.

"Amount of Rent is to be five hundred dollars and taxes. Lease of farm begins Nov. 1st, 1914 and runs one year.

"Same amount of fodder to be left in Barn as when taken.

Edwin G. Bailey,
"C. H. Southard."

The second and last lease was made November 18, 1915, covering the same premises, and including the personal property, but differed from the first in these provisions, viz.:

"Said lessee takes said premises with the crop of hay and straw for the year 1915 on said premises and it is agreed and understood that the same shall be fed on the premises.

"At the expiration of this lease, said Southard is to leave on the said premises four bins (streaked) of the same kind of grain that was there when he took said premises and also one small bin of grain (streaked)."

It will be noted that in both leases "the crop of hay and straw" for 1915, and fodder, were the subject of special mention, showing clearly that for purposes of his own the plaintiff controlled the hay crop of 1915, and Mr. Southard so understood it, and from the testimony it appears performed his contract.

The plaintiff contends that there was a mutual mistake in the last lease, that there should have been in addition to the foregoing reservations further concessions by the lessee affecting the crop of 1915, to the same extent and in the same manner as in the lease for 1914; but this claim is not supported by the testimony. This conclusion makes unnecessary further reference to the point raised by plaintiff's counsel that there was a mistake made which justified and made admissible evidence showing that the last lease should have contained other provisions limiting the rights of Southard, the lessee, under the last lease. That the plaintiff admitted the right of Southard to sell surplus hay in 1915 appears from a letter written by him to Southard June 8, 1916, in which he says:

"If there is a car of hay left over or a car load by pressing some straw it would be best to let it go, give more room for this year's crop. Let me hear from you soon as it would want to be pressed very soon."

And again, on June 8th, after Southard had written him that the hay for 1915 was to be fed on the premises, the plaintiff wrote in reply:

"What surplus hay there is and straw will only be in your way. I would think it would be better for you to have the room you can put your hay in cheaper. If you have 10 acres grain and it grows good it will fill up. Your hay last year was only $\frac{1}{2}$ crop, and the grain was light on account of season. 12 tons for a car. If you want to press a car and there is not hay enough make the Bal straw. I will give you shipping directions, this is likely the old hay left over last year, it ought to be shipped the mice will eat it all up.

"There will be no chance for any trouble on contra if you have used what hay you wished and Bal shipped to me, so to make room and save the hay from getting older and drop in price—

"Raining most of the time and cold.

"Resp. yours, E. G. Bailey."

The surplus hay amounted to 22 tons, and there was some straw, all of which the plaintiff took and did not account for, which if left on the farm would have been sufficient for the stock on the farm, in 1916. The case clearly shows that the lessee owned the hay crop of 1916, that he had the right to sell the same to Mr. Bean or any other person. In this case he sold to Mr. Bean, who from the evidence was a purchaser for value, and without notice of any defect in the title of Mr. Southard, if a defect had existed. But no mistake of the parties or defect in title appears. The defendant is therefore entitled to judgment in both cases and judgment for a return of the property. Washington Ice Co. v. Webster, 62 Me. 341, 16 Am. Rep. 462. So ordered.

(117 Me. 578)

CLARK v. LUCE et al.

(Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Nov. 27, 1918.)

NEW TRIAL \Leftarrow 71—MOTION — CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence on questions for the jury was conflicting, the verdict will not be set aside on motion for new trial.

On motion from Supreme Judicial Court, Penobscot County, at Law.

Action of assumpsit by David A. Clark against Joseph W. Luce and another. There was a verdict for plaintiff, and defendants move for a new trial. Motion overruled.

Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ.

L. B. Waldron, of Dexter, for plaintiff.

W. B. Peirce, of Bangor, for defendants.

HANSON, J. The plaintiff in this action of assumpsit sued to recover for money loaned, and for wages for his personal labor on the defendants' farm. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $152.56, and the case is before the court on defendants' general motion for a new trial.

The record discloses much conflict in the testimony, and the jury believed the plaintiff and his witnesses. The questions legally arising in the case were all for the jury, and on examining the evidence we find no reason to interfere with the verdict.

Motion overruled.

(362 Pa. 80)

SOISSON v. SCHOOL DIST. OF CITY OF CONNELLSVILLE.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. July 17, 1918.)

1. EVIDENCE — 555—EXPERTS—VALUE OF LAND.

On appeal from award of viewers, testimony of a properly qualified expert witness that, at a date of taking, the market value of property was a certain sum, should not have been stricken merely because he elsewhere stated that he would have given that sum if he had wanted it as a residence, which he did not.

2. EVIDENCE — 488—OPINION AS TO VALUE OF PROPERTY—QUALIFICATION.

Witness who had lived in borough 15 years and owned store property near condemned land for six years before condemnation, and who thereafter bought property on street on which it was located, and who had inquired of owners in vicinity as to value of their properties, was qualified to testify as to value of condemned land.

3. EVIDENCE — 118(2)—VALUE OF LAND—PRICE PAID.

On appeal from award of viewers in a condemnation proceeding, the court properly refused to permit defendant to show the price plaintiff had bid for the land more than four years before its condemnation.

4. EMINENT DOMAIN — 202(4) — MARKET VALUE — EVIDENCE — AVAILABILITY FOR BUILDING LOTS.

On appeal from award of viewers, plaintiffs point that, if the jury believed land available for subdivision and that the market value would be increased by dividing it into smaller building lots, the jury might consider such availability, was proper.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Fayette County.

Guela F. Solsson and husband appealed from an award of viewers in eminent domain proceedings by School District of the City of Connellsville. From a judgment on a verdict for plaintiffs, the defendant district appeals. Affirmed.

From the record it appeared that the school district of the city of Connellsville on May 9, 1916, appropriated four adjoining lots in the said city for the purpose of erecting thereon a high school building. Plaintiffs, Guela F. Solsson and William H. Solsson, the owners of one of the lots in question, appealed from the award of viewers which was in their favor. Thereafter an issue was framed in the common pleas, and on the trial of the appeal a verdict was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs.

[1] At the trial a duly qualified expert, after testifying that in his opinion the market value of the property in question was $10,000, subsequently stated on cross-examination when asked what would have been offered for the lot if it had been made known that it was for sale in the early part of May, 1916, answered:

"That is a pretty hard question to answer. You might get people there, just as I said before, that would bid it up above that and some that would bid it up about that; but if I wanted the property to build a residence I would give $10,000 for it."

And thereafter he stated that he did not want to buy it for a residence himself, as he had one. Plaintiffs moved to strike out the testimony of said witness because of his answers on cross-examination. The trial judge overruled the motion. (1)

[2] A witness called for the plaintiffs testified that he had lived in Connellsville 15 years and owned a store property 40 feet from the condemned land prior to the condemnation thereof, and thereafter bought a property on the street on which the condemned land was located, and before the condemnation had made inquiries of two property owners in the immediate vicinity, as to the value of their properties with a view of purchasing a property for himself. The trial judge overruled defendant's objection to the competency of such witness to express an opinion concerning the value of the condemned property. (2)

[3] The trial judge refused to permit defendant to show the price defendant had bid for the land in question in March, 1912. (3)

[4] The court affirmed plaintiffs' point for charge, which was as follows:

"If the jury believe that the land was available for subdivision and that the market value thereof would be increased by subdividing it into smaller building lots, then they have the right to consider such availability as an element of value in making up their verdict." (8)

Verdict for plaintiffs for $6,784.11 and judgment thereon.

Errors assigned, among others, were various rulings on evidence (1, 2, and 3), and the charge of the court (8).

Argued before BROWN, C. J., MOSCH-ZISKER, FRAZER, WALLING, and SIMPSON, JJ.

E. C. Higbee, of Uniontown, for appellant.
James R. Gray, of Uniontown, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. The issue in the court below was for the ascertainment of damages to which the plaintiffs were entitled for land taken for school purposes. The assignments of error do not call for discussion. It is sufficient to say of them that they disclose no reversible error, and the judgment is, accordingly, affirmed.

(363 Pa. 100)

PENNIMAN et al. v. HOFFMAN et al.
(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. July 17, 1918.)INJUNCTION — 189—BUILDING RESTRICTION — SCOPE OF RELIEF—USE OF BUILDING—REMOVAL.

In suit to enjoin erection of garage in alleged violation of building restriction against offensive occupations, in which preliminary injunction restrained use of building as a public garage, but where it was thereafter completed, apparently for use as public garage, refusal to that it was erected in violation of injunction, but could only act when use of building became offensive.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Bill in equity by James H. Penniman and others against Joseph B. Hoffman and others to restrain the erection of a garage building. From a decree refusing prayer of bill, complainants appeal. Affirmed.

From the record it appeared that plaintiffs and defendants held their respective properties subject to the following covenant and restriction:

"And subject also to the express condition and agreement that no slaughterhouse, skin-dressing establishment, hose or engine house, blacksmith shop, carpenter shop, glue, starch, soap, or candle manufactory, livery stable, or other building for offensive occupation shall at any time hereafter be erected or used upon any part of the aforesaid lot of ground."

The lower court found that the neighborhood immediately surrounding the property upon which the building was erected was exclusively residential in character. The defendants' premises were Nos. 4317 and 4319 Walnut street, Philadelphia. The plaintiffs were owners of property in the same block.

The opinion of the Supreme Court further states the case.

The lower court entered a decree perpetually restraining defendants from using or permitting others to use the buildings on the lots in question for the purpose of a public garage or storage house for automobiles. Thereafter the defendants continued the erection of the building having such appearance. The lower court refuses to decree the removal of the building. Plaintiffs appealed.

Error assigned was the decree of the court.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and MOSCHZISKER, FRAZER, and WALLING, JJ.

Ira J. Williams and Charles L. Guerin, both of Philadelphia, for appellants.

PER CURIAM. The final decree in the proceedings instituted against the appellees enjoined them from using, or permitting any one to use, any buildings on the lots described in the bill "for the purpose of a public garage or storage house for automobiles," and the mandatory order asked for by the appellants was properly refused for the following reason, given by the learned court below:

"Between the time of the grant of the preliminary injunction and the final hearing the defendants had proceeded with the erection of the building substantially without change from the one originally projected. It bears all the appearance of a building erected for use as a public garage. The plaintiffs have requested the court to conclude as a matter of law that, the buildings having been erected in violation of the terms of the injunction, the court should now require the same to be removed. With this view we cannot concur. The character of the may not exercise supervision. It is only when the use to which the building is put becomes offensive that this court may act."

Decree affirmed, at appellants' costs.

(262 Pa. 136)

ALCORN v. D. L. WARD CO.

(Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. July 17, 1918.)

1. EQUITY \S 359—VOLUNTARY DISMISSAL OF BILL—EFFECT.

The complainant may generally move to dismiss his own bill with costs at any time before the decree, it being a matter of course to permit him to do so; and, when the bill has been dismissed and costs paid, the suit is terminated.

2. EQUITY \S 359—DISMISSAL OF BILL—INJUNCTION.

Where bill in equity for an accounting has been withdrawn by leave of court and costs have been paid by plaintiff, who thereafter brings an action at law for the same cause of action, defendant cannot maintain a motion entitled in former equity suit to enjoin plaintiff from proceeding in his action at law.

Appeal from Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County.

Bill in equity for accounting by Samuel S. Alcorn against the D. L. Ward Company. Motion by defendant for an order to restrain the plaintiff from proceeding at law refused, and defendant appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Argued before BROWN, C. J., and POTTER, STEWART, MOSCHZISKER, and FRAZER, JJ.

S. Heckscher and Alfred Aarons, both of Philadelphia, for appellant.

William T. Connor and John R. K. Scott, both of Philadelphia, for appellee.

BROWN, C. J. On February 1, 1917, Samuel S. Alcorn, the appellee, filed a bill in equity in the court below for an accounting by the defendant on a contract of employment. A demurrer to the bill was overruled and an answer filed. When the case was called for hearing on September 28th of the same year, the plaintiff withdrew his bill and subsequently paid the costs. In the following November he brought an action at law on the same contract, and on January 30, 1918—some four months after the bill had been withdrawn—the appellant filed a petition in the equity proceeding, asking for an order enjoining the plaintiff from proceeding in his action at law. This petition was denied, on the ground that the equity proceeding was no longer pending, as the bill "had been withdrawn upon motion and with permission before the taking of testimony before the court."

[1, 2] If the equity proceeding was at an end at the time appellant's petition was filed, the court could make no order in it, and appellant's remedy, if entitled to the restrain-ing order asked for, was by a bill filed by it against the appellee. That the equity proceeding had been fully ended is not open to question by the appellant. The bill was withdrawn by leave of court, and this was a dismissal of it by the court's permission. "In a court of law the plaintiff may suffer a nonsuit at any time during the trial until the jury are ready to give in their verdict, and even then he might, were it not for our act of assembly. This is often a great hardship upon defendants. So it is the general rule in a court of chancery that a complainant may move to dismiss his own bill with costs, at any time before the decree, and it is a matter of course to permit him to dismiss it. Cummings v. Bennett, 8 Paige [N. Y.] 79; 4 Milne & Craig, 194, Curtis v. Lloyd. And even upon the hearing of the cause, if the court has merely directed an issue, the plaintiff may, before the trial of the issue, obtain an order to dismiss the bill with costs, because the directing of an issue is only to satisfy the conscience of the court preparatory to its giving judgment." Saylor's App., 39 Pa. 495.

In the present case the appellee had offered no testimony at the time he withdrew his bill. When the case was called for hearing he abandoned it, and the appellant having presented to him its bill of costs and received payment of the same—not due until the cause had finally ended—is not now to be heard that the proceedings is still pending and an order can be made in it. This being so, it is unnecessary to determine whether the action of the court below in denying appellant's petition was interlocutory or final. Whatever it was, the appellant has no standing to complain of it.

Appeal dismissed, at appellant's costs.

MEMORANDUM DECISIONS

CURTIS v. NIXON. (Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Sept. 7, 1918.) On motion from Superior Court, Kennebec County, at Law. Action by George H. Curtis against L. O. Nixon. Verdict for plaintiff. On motion. Motion overruled. Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ. Andrews & Nelson, of Augusta, for plaintiff. Harvey D. Eaton and Frank O. Dean, both of Waterville, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff recovered a verdict of $406.33 for damages sustained in an automobile collision. The issue was legal liability on the part of the defendant. As is usual in this class of cases, the testimony was sharply contradictory. The jury sustained the plaintiff's contention, and the evidence abundantly justifies the verdict. The responsibility was placed, where it belongs, on the defendant. Motion overruled.

HARVEY v. HARVEY. (Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. Nov. 16, 1918.) On Motion from Supreme Judicial Court, Arcoostook County, at Law. Action by Fred H. Harvey against Simon Harvey. Verdict for plaintiff, and defendant moves for new trial. Motion overruled. Argued before CORNISH, C. J., and SPEAR, HANSON, PHILBROOK, DUNN, and MORRILL, JJ. Shaw & Thornton, of Houlton, for plaintiff. Powers & Guild, of Ft. Fairfield, D. L. Theriault, of Ft. Kent, and Benedict F. Maher, of Augusta, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. Verdict was rendered for plaintiff and defendant moves for new trial on the customary grounds. The plaintiff claimed that he was deceived by the defendant in a trade for exchange of horses, that the defendant stated, when the trade was made, that the horse was "all right in every way," that the horse, in fact, was wind-broken and of an ugly disposition, which facts were well known by the defendant at the time the trade was made, and that finally the horse sickened and died. The defendant denied any representations as to the conditions of the horse at the time of the trade, and urged that the plaintiff's ill treatment of the horse after he obtained him was the real cause of the bad condition of the horse and of his death. We must judge the testimony from the colorless pages of a printed record. The jury saw the witnesses, heard them testify, and weighed the testimony in the light of such opportunity to see and hear. We have examined the record carefully, and are unable to say that the verdict, based upon the testimony as the jury saw and heard the witnesses, was so clearly wrong, or was the result of such bias or prejudice, as would warrant us in declaring that the verdict is a palpable error. Motion overruled.

THURSTON v. BENTON & FAIRFIELD ST. R. CO. (Supreme Judicial Court of Maine. July 3, 1918.) On Motion from Supreme Judicial Court, Kennebec County, at Law. Action by Alsada Thurston against the Benton and Fairfield Street Railroad Company. Verdict for plaintiff. On motion. Motion sustained, unless certain damages be remitted. F. W. Clair, of Waterville, for plaintiff. Weeks & Weeks, of Fairfield, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. In this case the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for $3,737.50. The case comes up on the usual form of motion. The verdict of the jury upon the question of liability cannot be disturbed. But the damages are manifestly excessive. It is the opinion of this court that $1,500 is ample and liberal. It is therefore ordered: Motion sustained, unless the amount of the verdict above $1,500 be remitted within 30 days from the certification of this decision.

PURCELL v. INTERNATIONAL MOTOR CO. (No. 84.) (Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey. March 4, 1918.) Appeal from Supreme Court. Proceeding by Patrick Purcell under the Workmen's Compensation Act, opposed by the International Motor Company, employer. From a judgment of the Supreme Court (103 Atl. 860), affirming an award, the employer appeals. Affirmed. Kallsch & Kallsch, of Newark, for appellant. Codington & Blatz, of Plainfield, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. The judgment under review herein should be affirmed, for the reasons ex-larger in the Supreme Court.

TRENCHARD, PARKER, and KALISCH, JJ., dissent.

PARKER, J. (dissenting). The award rests on a finding of permanent injury to the eye-sight which in my judgment is not supported by any evidence in this case. At the trial both sides rested without any testimony of the permanent character of the injury. Petitioner had not lost either eye, and claimed only impairment of vision. The court called attention to lack of evidence of permanency of impairment, and petitioner recalled an expert previously examined, who declined to give any opinion that it was permanent; and an examination of the whole of his testimony makes it clear that he considered the petitioner a malingerer. He said in substance that injuries of that character were sometimes permanent but usually not. Further he would not go. The court, in deciding the case, said that as the injury was not shown to be temporary he must conclude it was permanent. This manifestly reversed the burden of proof. I take it for granted that in a workmen's compensation case the petitioner must bear the burden imposed on other plaintiffs who seek to deprive defendant of money or property by a claim of damages, of proving the amount of damages to which he was entitled. Of course, if he has lost an arm, or a leg, or an eye, the situation itself speaks, because we know the missing member will not grow again. But when the injury is not claimed to be more than a functional impairment of vision, the court must depend on the knowledge and experience of experts and if no expert testimony points to permanent impairment, the court should not assume it. I think the judgment should be reversed.

LIBERTY TRUST COMPANY
(Court of Errors and Appeals, Oct. 11, 1917.) Appeal
ery. Interpleader by t
Works against the Libert
S. Schwarzwaelder, as ex
From a decree of the Co
Atl. 841), the Liberty Tr
Affirmed. Archibald F. ark, for appellant. Linton
Newark, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. The
will be affirmed, for the opinion filed in the court cellor Lane (102 Atl. 841).

R. W. HARTNETT CO
CIER PUB. CO. (Supre vania. July 17, 1918.)
Common Pleas, York Co
R. W. Hartnett Company
Fancier Publishing Comy report of Ray P. Sherwo pointed to distribute proc dismissed, and report of Delone, a creditor, appe gued before BROWN, C.
KER, FRAZER, WALLI
JJ. V. K. Keesey, of
John J. Bollinger, of Yor

PER CURIAM. To sus
ings of the auditor, confir low, would have to be d have not been convinced such disturbance, the dec affirmed, at appellant's c

